Mr. Major: On the assumptions set out in his report on the draft of the Social Security (Contributions, Re-rating) Order 1985 (Cmnd. 9672) the Government Actuary's estimates of the revenue effect of a one per cent. change in both the primary and secondary contribution rates are:

£ million

	Employees' (primary) contributions	Employers' (secondary) contributions
Band 1	30	40
Band 2	75	85
Band 3	1,190	225
Band 4	—	1085

Mr. Yeo asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what assumptions were used by the Government Actuary in preparing the autumn statement 1985 about the numbers of class 1 national insurance contributors in each of the earnings bands proposed for 1986-87, their aggregate earnings and about the proportion that are contracted out of the state earnings related pension scheme.

Mr. Major: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Departmental Offices, Erdington

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the current weekly rate of application for each of the principal benefits at his Department's office at Kingsbury road, Erdington, Birmingham; and how this compares with the position one and two years ago.

Mr. Major: The table shows the average weekly rate of claims made for principal benefits during October 1985, 1984 and 1983 at the Department's office in Erdington.

Benefit	Average Weekly Claims
	October 1985	October 1984	October 1983
Sickness/invalidity benefit	56	56	65
Maternity allowance	21	13	28
Retirement pension	45	56	33
Widows benefit	5	5	5
Death grant	30	30	30
Industrial disablement benefit	6	5	4
Supplementary benefit	342	287	419

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the number of current payments of each of the principal benefits being made at his Department's office at Kingsbury road, Erdington, Birmingham; and how this compares with the position one and two years ago.

Mr. Major: The table shows the number of payments made to claimants by the Department's office in Erdington during the four week period ending 22 October 1985—the latest available figures—and for the same periods one and two years ago.

Supplementary Benefits
Order books	2,750	2,193	1,850
Girocheques	3,635	3,003	3,024

Order books	352	407	621
Girocheques	4,055	3,544	3,832

	1983	1984	1985
Long term benefits (retirement pension, widows benefit, disablement benefit and child benefit)
Order books	included in the figure for short term benefit order book issues.	207	included in the figure for short term order books issued.
Girocheques	included in the figure given for short-term benefit giros	5,263	1,792

Note:
1. Supplementary benefit payments do not include instructions issued to Unemployment Benefit offices to pay benefit on the Department's behalf.
2. Separate figures for short and long term benefit giro issues for 1983, and order books for 1983 and 1985 are not available.
3. It is not possible to provide a further breakdown of contributory benefit payments into the individual national insurance benefits paid by the local office.

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is currently the average time taken by his Department's office at Kingsbury road, Erdington, Birmingham, to process new claims for single payments; and how this compares with the position one and two years ago.

Mr. Major: Claims for single payments are determined as soon as possible after all the information required has been collected. A limited sample of recent cases at Erdington local office suggests that on average, claims for single payments are currently being determined 8-9 days after their receipt.

Similar figures for 1984 and 1983 are not available.

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is currently the average time taken to deal with new benefit claims from (a) householders and (b) non-householders at his Department's office at Kingsbury road, Erdington, Birmingham; and how this compares with the position one and two years ago.

Mr. Major: Information is not broken down in the form requested. The latest available figures show that the average time taken to deal with all new supplementary benefit claims at the Department's office in Erdington is 11 days, as it was at the same time last year and the year before. The figures are not broken down between types of claim.

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what changes, by grade and number, there have been in staffing at his Department's office at Kingsbury road, Erdington, Birmingham, compared with 1984 and 1983, including temporary staff.

Mr. Major: The following table sets out staff in post by grade on 1 April for the last three years, and the situation on 1 November 1985.

Grade	1.4.83	1.4.84	1.4.85	1.11.85
Principal	1	1	1	1
Senior Executive Officer	1	1	1	1
Higher Executive Officer	7	7	7	7
Local Officer 1	41	42	44	46·5
Local Officer 2	80	78	88	86

Security Guard	2	1	2	2
Messenger	1	1	—	1
Total Permanent Staff)	166	163	177	179
Casual Staff (Clerical Assistants)	9	2	2	1

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will estimate the number of current claimants of each of the principal benefits administered from his Department's offices at Kingsbury road, Erdington, Birmingham, and Walsall road, Birmingham, who live in the Erdington parliamentary constituency; and how this compares with the position one, two and five years ago.

Mr. Major: The Erdington constituency is covered for social security purposes by two of the Department's offices but their boundaries are not conterminous with those of the constituency. The number of claimants receiving supplementary benefits from these offices in July 1985—the latest available figures—and at the same period one and two years ago were:

Birmingham, Erdington	15,733	16,293	17,280
Birmingham, Perry Barr	11,246	11,284	11,449

No information is available for the position 5 years ago. Details of claimants receiving national insurance benefits are not available in the form requested.

Nurses (Accommodation Charges)

Mr. White asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what were the accommodation charges for nurses in the following categories: (a) first year nurse, (b) second year nurse, (c) third year nurse, (d) enrolled nurse, (e) staff nurse II, (f) sister II on 1 April 1984 and 1 October, together with the percentage increases in each case; and if there are any plans to increase such charges.

Mr. Hayhoe: Under an agreement between National Health Service management and the staff organisations lodging charges for nurses and midwives are set nationally each April at a level designed to reflect the full economic cost of providing the accommodation. Charges depend on the type of occupation not the grade of the occupant, although students and pupil nurses occupying the simplest type of accommodation receive an automatic abatement of 40 per cent. and the national charges may be reduced locally by up to 40 per cent. where accommodation is not up to a reasonably acceptable standard.

The table shows the charges for the various grades of accommodation as from 1 April 1984 and from 1 April 1985; under the terms of the agreement charges will be revised from 1 April 1986 taking account of movements in rents and other relevant costs to October 1985.

Grade of Accommodation	Charges as from 1 April '84 £	Charges as from 1 April '85 £	Increase 1984-85 £	Increase 1984-85 Percentage
A. Bed sitting rooms with 4-6 sharing common facilities
Students and pupils	463	486	23	5
Other staff	771	810	39	5
B. Bed sitting rooms with 3-4 sharing common facilities	920	966	46	5
C. 1 Bedroom and living room each, with 2 sharing common facilities	1,362	1,430	68	5
D. 1 Bedroom self-contained flat	1,952	2,050	98	5

Child Care (Hampshire)

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many day care places are available for children in Hampshire; and what are the comparative figures for each year 1979 to 1984.

Mr. Whitney: The information is given in the table. Further details are given in the Department's publication "Children's Day Care Facilities—at 31 March 1983" copies of which are available in the Library.

Hampshire-Provision of Day Care Places for Children under Five

Geriatric Beds (Hampshire)

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many acute geriatric beds there are in each Hampshire hospital presently; and what are the comparative figures for each year from 1979 to 1984.

Mr. Whitney: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Hypothermia (Hampshire)

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many deaths from hypothermia there have been in Portsmouth and Hampshire, respectively, in the past year.

Mr. Whitney: The number of deaths registered between 1 January 1985 and 1 November 1985 with a mention of hypothermia on the death certificate to residents of Portsmouth and Hampshire are six and seventeen respectively.

Hospital Beds (Hampshire)

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the total number of hospital beds in Portsmouth for the latest available date and also for each year since 1979.

Mr. Whitney: The requested information is given in the table. The number of in-patient cases treated per available bed per year increased from 16·2 to 20·5 between 1979 and 1984.

Hospital Waiting Lists (Hampshire)

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is now the total number of people on hospital waiting lists in the Hampshire health districts by specialty.

Mr. Whitney: The available information is in terms of district health authorities. This is given in the table.

* DHA lies partly within Hampshire.

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many women are on hospital waiting lists in Portsmouth and the South East Hampshire health district for gynaecological treatment;

(2) how many people in Portsmouth and the South East Hampshire health district awaiting urgent operations have been on the hospital waiting list for more than a month;

(3) what is the average length of the waiting list for non-emergency orthopaedic cases in South East Hampshire and Portsmouth respectively.

Mr. Whitney: Information is not available centrally in precisely the form requested. On 31 March 1985, the latest date for which information is available centrally, there were in Portsmouth and South East Hampshire District health authority 1,145 cases on in-patient waiting lists in the specialty of gynaecology and 1,052 non-urgent cases in the orthopaedic specialty. A total of 102 urgent cases in the surgical specialties had been waiting for more than a month.

Research Projects

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list any research projects he is funding, has funded or intends to fund on (a) Alzheimer's disease, (b) osteomalacia and (c) kidney disorders.

Mr. Whitney: The list of projects funded currently or in the recent past by the Department is as follows:

a. Alzheimer's disease:

The Department has commissioned in recent years a substantial body of research on the care of the elderly mentally infirm, of the confused and of those suffering from dementia—among which are included, of course, people with Alzheimer's disease. Among these are (i) The Supporters of Confused Elderly People at Home (Enid Levin, National Institute for Social Work (Report 1983) and (ii) Specialist Services for the Elderly. A study of Referrals to Geriatric, Psychiatric and Social Services (David Wilkin et al, University of Manchester) (Report 1984.)

b. Osteomalacia:

The Social Medicine and Health Services Research Unit, St. Thomas's Hospital Medical School, London (Professor W. Holland): (i) The value of plasma calcium, phosphate and alkaline phosphatase measurements in the diagnosis of histological osteomalacia (1982). (ii) Value of the history in diagnosing osteomalacia among Asians presenting to the Health Service (1983).

c. Kidney disorders:

1. St. Thomas's Hospital, London (Dr. A. J. Wing and Dr. S. Challah): Study of Referral Patterns of Patients with Chronic Renal Failure for Dialysis and Transplantation in the UK (1983-84).

2. The Social Medicine and Health Services Research Unit, St. Thomas's Hospital Medical School, London (Professor W. Holland): (i) Negative selection of patients for dialysis and transplantation in the UK. (1983-84).

(ii) Evaluation of the Lithotripter Study (April 1985 to 1988).

(3) Guy's Hospital Medical School, London (Professor H. Keen): Primary Prevention of Renal Disease and Postponement of End-Stage Renal Failure in Diabetic Patients (1984-89).

We have no immediate plans to fund further research in these fields though consideration is currently being given to research proposals concerned with aspects of kidney disorders.

I understand that the Medical Research Council, which receives an annual grant-in-Aid from the Department of Education and Science, is also at present funding research relevant to these conditions.

Private Hospitals

Mr. Maxton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many social security or industrial injury claimants requiring medical examinations have been referred to private hospitals in England and Wales and Scotland; what is the cost involved for each patient and to which hospitals the patients have been referred.

Mr. Major: To enable the statutory adjudicating authorities to determine a claim for benefit, medical examination by a consultant may be necessary. The place of the examination is entirely a matter for the consultant concerned, and information is not held centrally on how many take place in private hospitals.

Board and Lodging

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how long after a claim is registered he anticipates a decision will be made about exercising the discretionary powers proposed in the revised draft board and lodging regulations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The time taken to reach a decision will depend on the circumstances of the individual case including the degree of urgency. Staff will be instructed to refer cases involving time limits to headquarters by telephone.

Clinical Academic Staff

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has on the effect on the National Health Service of clinical academic staff posts remaining vacant because of a lack of suitable applicants.

Mr. Hayhoe: While I am aware of recent reports of such difficulties in recruitment I have no current evidence of significant failure to maintain National Health Service patient services associated with these difficulties.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the role of clinical academic staff in the provision of patient care in the National Health Service.

Mr. Hayhoe: Clinical academics make a welcome contribution to patient care just as National Health Service doctors contribute to the teaching of medical schools, with mutual benefit.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what percentage of patient care is carried out by clinical academic staff in the acute services in teaching districts and in the specialty of pathology.

Mr. Hayhoe: I regret that information in the form requested is not available. We estimate National Health Service honorary medical staff, who are mainly clinical academics, are about 4 per cent. of the overall total and about 15 per cent. in pathology. (Both percentages are whole-time equivalent.) The proportions would be higher in teaching districts.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what representations he has received about maintaining parity of salaries between university clinical staff and their National Health Service colleagues;

(2) what representations he has received from clinical academic staff about the non-implementation of their 1985 salary increase.

Mr. Brooke: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. Friend has received representations on these matters from hon. Members, from the Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals, the Association of University Teachers and the British Medical Association, and from individual members of university clinical staff.

Doctors (Pay)

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services which groups within the medical professions have not received a salary increase for 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: None whose remuneration is within my departmental responsibility.

Food Poisoning

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his estimate of the number of people who have died from food poisoning in National Health Service hospitals in each of the last five years.

Mr. Whitney: The numbers of deaths occurring in National Health Service hospitals in England and Wales, where the underlying cause of death was food poisoning*, are shown in the table for each of the last five years.

These statistics are for place of death; the location of the patient at the time of the acquisition of the infection is not known to the Office of Population, Censuses and Surveys.

Crown Immunity

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his estimate of the additional cost likely to be incurred by the National Health Service if Crown immunity were abolished.

Mr. Hayhoe: I shall let the right hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Private Residential Homes

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will specify the number of local authorities which have appointed registration officers for private residential homes; and what qualifications are needed for appointment to these posts.

Mr. Whitney: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him on 30 October at column 578.

Thames Regional Health Authorities

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what facilities have been developed in the four Thames regions to treat the following groups of patients, namely, drug misusers, the elderly, those suffering from mental illness and the mentally-handicapped since 1979.

Mr. Whitney: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Water

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans he has to issue advice to health authorities on the effects of acidification of waters on the aluminium content of potable supplies.

Mr. Whitney: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Newhall Hostel, Liverpool

Mr. Loyden asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will make a statement on the future of the Newhall hostel for the mentally handicapped in Liverpool;

(2) what alternative arrangements he has made for the mentally handicapped who will be affected by the closure of the Newhall hostel in Liverpool.

Mr. Whitney: This is a matter which is the responsibility of the local authority.

Widows

Mr. Adams asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to increase widows' pensions and war widows' pensions in the current financial year; and if he has any plans to pay any lump sum at Christmas.

Mr. Major: Yes. Widows' and war widows' pensions will increase by seven per cent. on 25 November 1985, and the £10 Christmas bonus will be paid to all widows, retirement pensioners and other long-term benefit recipients in the week beginning 2 December 1985.

Finer Report

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for Social Services to what extent the recommendations of the Finer report have been implemented.

Mr. Major: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Human Tissue

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will order his officials to investigate alleged breaches of the code of conduct advised in the Peel report 1972 on the use of foetal material; if he will press charges against those in breach of such guidelines under the Human Tissue Act; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether he is still satisfied that there is no evidence available to his Department to substantiate allegations of a trade in human foetal material;

(3) what action he has taken after receipt of correspondence from Celaton Laboratory Research dated 6 December 1984 and Jacobson Chemicals Ltd. dated 21 January 1985 to Mr. R. Aitken, offering to supply foetal material for cosmetics, sent by the hon. Member for Belfast, South.

Mr. Hayhoe [pursuant to his reply 11 November 1985, c. 94]: Officials are investigating the allegations made in the BBC television programme "Tomorrow's World" on 31 October, with Celaton Laboratory Research and Jacobson Chemicals and no other evidence has been received relating to an alleged trade in human foetal material. The code of practice contained in the Peel report was drawn up to guide the medical and nursing professions in the use of foetuses and foetal material for research. It is non-statutory, and any proven breach would be for the bodies statutorily responsible for disciplinary matters in those professions to consider. The Human Tissue Act does not apply to the use of foetuses or foetal tissue where the foetus was delivered dead before 28 weeks gestation.

Liver Transplants

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many (a) National Health Service hospitals and (b) private hospitals have facilities to carry out liver transplants;

(2) whether there has been any cutback in the beds used for liver transplant work because the health authority had insufficient resources to staff them.

Mr. Whitney [pursuant to his reply, 13 November 1985, c. 202]: The operating theatre and intensive care facilities necessary for liver transplantations are available in a very large number of NHS and private hospitals; the important factor is the availability of appropriately trained and experienced staff. Within the National Health Service, the supra regional arrangements encourage the concentration of this expertise within the designated supra regional centres. I am not aware that in any of these centres beds are specifically allocated to liver transplantation, so the question of unstaffed beds does not arise. Information about facilities in private hospitals is not available.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Commuters (Tax Relief)

Mr. Murphy asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent representations he has received advocating the introduction of tax relief for commuters in respect of transport costs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moore: The cost of travel between home and a person's normal place of work is a personal expense and does not qualify for tax relief. An employee is not entitled to relief because the expenses are not incurred in the performance of his duties, and a self-employed person is not entitled to it because the expenses are not incurred exclusively for the purposes of the trade or profession. Only a very few representations on this subject have been received in the last year.

Investors in Industry

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the extent of the public stake in Investors in Industry.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The Government hold no direct stake, but the Bank of England holds 15·02 per cent. of the shares of Investors in Industry.

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the Bank of England retains a nominee director on the board of Investors in Industry.

Mr. Ian Stewart: No; but, coincidentally, a member of the board of Investors in Industry is a non-executive director of the Bank of England.

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps the Bank of England takes to monitor the affairs and lending policy of Investors in Industry.

Mr. Ian Stewart: As one of its major shareholders the Bank of England keeps in close touch with the general management of Investors in Industry but as a matter of policy takes no part in lending or investment decisions.

Pound Sterling (Exchange Rates)

Ms. Clare Short asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the value of the pound sterling in relation to (a) the US dollar, (b) the French franc and (c) the deutschmark for each year since 1955.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The average exchange rates for sterling against the US dollar, the deutschmark and the French franc in the 10 months to end-October 1985 are as follows:

	Average exchange rate
Dollar/sterling	1·267
Deutschmark/sterling	3·803
French franc/sterling	11·61

Annual averages for the years 1955 to 1983 are published in Economic Trends, annual supplement, 1985, p. 142, and for 1984, in the October edition of Economic Trends, p. 50.

Interest Rates

Ms. Clare Short asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will provide comparable information on the level of interest rates for each year since 1955.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Information on the Bank rate/minimum lending rate from June 1932 until the minimum lending rate was suspended in August 1981, and on London clearing banks' base rates from September 1971 to August 1984 is published in Economic Trends 1985 annual supplement, pages 194 and 195. Information on the latter is continued on page 66 of the October 1985 edition of Economic Trends.

VAT

Mr. Hancock asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if there are currently any plans to remove value added tax on the sale of British Legion poppies;

(2) how much money has been collected from the value added tax on British Legion poppies since value added tax was introduced;

(3) if he will introduce legislation to remove value added tax from the sale of flags and emblems for charitable purposes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moore: Flags and emblems, including Remembrance Day poppies, are considered to be tokens given in recognition of a donation. Neither the giving of a token in recognition of a donation nor the donation itself is subject to value added tax.

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to the answer of 11 November, Official Report, column 68, if he will specify the categories covered by the term other supplies in relation to the taxation at the standard rate of human organs or tissue.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to the reply, 15 November 1985, c. 319]: The term "other supplies" in the answer by my hon. Friend the Minister of State of 11 November referred to any supplies of the goods concerned falling outside the conditions for exemption from VAT. Such supplies, if any, are not categorised or recorded separately.

VAT (Staff Disciplinary Procedures)

Dr. Mawhinney asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many Customs and Excise employees involved on value added tax work have been subject to disciplinary procedures in each of the last 10 years (a) nationally, (b) in the Halifax office and (c) in the Peterborough office.

Mr. MacGregor: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Departmental Publicity

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many (a) different press releases were issued, (b) press conferences were held and (c) different documents or papers relating to information or publicity were issued by his Department in the past 12 months.

Mr. MacGregor: During the year ended 31 March 1985, the Treasury issued 205 press releases; press conferences, briefings and interviews were held regularly throughout the year; and 10 issues of "Economic Progress Report" were published.

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the cost to his Department of issuing press releases, holding press conferences and issuing documents or papers of information or publicity in the last 12 months for which figures are available.

Mr. MacGregor: About £200,000.

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer in what form his Department keeps accounts of its expenditure on publicity; and by what means those accounts are published.

Mr. MacGregor: This expenditure is part of the cost of the Treasury's information division, spending on which totalled £508,000 in 1984-85. The total costs of the information division are subsumed under subhead B1 of the Estimate for Ecomomic and Financial Administration (HM Treasury): class XIII, Vote 4 and are published annually in the Appropriation Account.

Sub-Saharan Africa (Debt and Interest Repayments)

Mr. Blair asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has as to how much British banks receive by way of debt and interest repayments from countries in Sub-Saharan Africa.

Mr. Ian Stewart [pursuant to his reply, 14 November 1985, c. 274]: No comprehensive published information is available for British banks' receipts of debt and interest repayments from countries in Sub-Saharan Africa. However, table 15 in the Bank of England's Quarterly Bulletin shows outstanding consolidated claims of United Kingdom registered monetary sector institutions (including their branches and subsidiaries worldwide) on certain individual African countries, a maturity analysis of which is also given. Table 14 in the Bulletin gives figures for the stock of United Kingdom claims and liabilities on a larger number of African countries of United Kingdom monetary sector and other financial institutions (not including branches and subsidiaries abroad).

DEFENCE

Ulster Defence Regiment

Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many members of the Ulster Defence Regiment have been charged with criminal offences; and how many have been convicted since its inception.

Mr. Lee: As I explained in reply to the hon. Member on 26 July, at c. 879, no statistics are available covering all types of criminal offence. Some information is, however, available on convictions relating to serious crimes of violence.

Following my earlier answer, further cases have been identified and, since 1970, we now have records of 11 UDR members or ex-members who have been convicted of murder and six of manslaughter. In addition, 99 have been convicted of assault since 1978. The great majority of these offences were of a domestic nature.

North Sea (Aircraft Incident)

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will make a statement on the incident in October in which British aircraft belonging to his Department were involved in a near miss with a Piper Aztec of Kondair over the North sea.

Mr. Stanley: In accordance with usual practice, the pilot's report of this incident is under investigation by the joint airmiss working group of the national air traffic service. As to whether or not MOD aircraft were involved, it would not be right for me to comment in advance of the conclusion of the joint airmiss working group's investigation.

Feral Pigeons (Woolwich Arsenal)

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many attempts have been made to cull feral pigeons at Woolwich Arsenal during the current year; how many pigeons have been killed; what has been the effect on other wild birds; and whether the Royal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals was given prior notification in each case;

(2) what representations have been received from the Royal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals about the culling of pigeons at Woolwich Arsenal; and what reply has been given.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Three culls of feral pigeons have taken place at Woolwich Arsenal in 1985. One hundred and thirty-five pigeons were killed and no other wild birds were affected on these occasions. Under the terms of the licence granted by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, the regional pests control office was notified 10 days in advance that a cull would take place. This officer attended the cull on two of the three occasions. There is no requirement to give precise prior notification to the RSPCA and none was given.

On June 1985 a local inspector of the RSPCA inquired about the method of culling and the effects on other birds. Later that month officials at Woolwich Arsenal met the inspector and he declared himself satisfied with the methods employed.

HMS Otter and Euryalus

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Defence how, in terms of cost and time, the contract provisions for the refurbishment for HMS Otter and HMS Euryalus compare with the cost and length of refurbishment times for similar work carried out by royal naval dockyards.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The comparison of the commercial refits of Her Majesty's ships Otter and Euryalus against those of similar ships refitted in Devonport dockyard will include an assessment of the variations in costs and time taken. The study is not yet complete.

Mungham Report

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to publish the report of the committee for relations between Government, the armed services and the media in times of conflict, under the chairmanship of Mr. Geoff Mungham.

Mr. Stanley: The report which we commissioned from the Centre for Journalism Studies at University College, Cardiff, has been received and is being studied. The authors have the right to publish the report, subject to security considerations. My right hon. Friend also intends to place a non-classified version of this report in the Library in due course.

Establishments (Location and Dispersal)

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will name the firm of chartered surveyors used to provide advice on the location and dispersal of Ministry of Defence establishments.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Messrs. Healey and Baker were retained under contract to survey the defence estate and identify sites which might realise substantial receipts if sale were possible.

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether consultations with the Civil Service trade unions took place before the decision was taken to use the firm of chartered surveyors to advise on location and dispersal of Ministry of Defence establishments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Healey and Baker's survey was strictly an identification of those parts of the defence estate which might be attractive commercially. After their report was received, a working group was set up to study the feasibility of implementing their recommendations. The Civil Service trades unions were brought in at that stage.

Trident

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether tests to validate the British Trident warhead will be carried out at the United States test site in Nevada; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my predecessor, my right hon. Friend the Member for Bosworth (Mr. Butler) on 24 May 1985 at column 600.

Iran (Spare Parts)

Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Defence when Her Majesty's Government were informed of the agreement between representatives of International Military Services and representatives of the Islamic Republic of Iran, dated 16 October 1984, relating to the delivery of spare parts to Iran.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Officials were kept in touch throughout the discussions between International Military Services and Iranian representatives relating to the delivery of spare parts to Iran. The spares concerned were due for supply under an existing contract, having been fully paid for prior to the Iranian revolution. Their delivery was entirely consistent with the guidelines set out by my right hon. Friend the Foreign and Commonwealth Secretary in his reply to the right hon. Member for Tweeddale, Ettrick and Lauderdale (Mr. Steel) on 29 October 1985 at column 454.

Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether there have been any consignments of spare parts for military equipment delivered in the last 12 months to the Islamic Republic of Iran in pursuance of an agreement between it and International Military Services.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Yes. Various spare parts for military vehicles and for support ships have been delivered to Iran in the last 12 months under an agreement with International Military Services. In both cases, the spares concerned were due for supply under existing contracts, signed and paid for prior to the Iranian revolution. The supply of these spares was fully consistent with the guidelines set out by my right hon. Friend the Foreign and Commonwealth Secretary in his reply to the right hon. Member for Tweeddale, Ettrick and Lauderdale (Mr. Steel) on 29 October 1985 at column 454.

Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether there have been any consignments of spare parts for vehicles and other military equipment delivered by International Military Services to the Islamic Republic of Iran in the calendar years 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983 and 1984.

Mr. Norman Lamont: No, other than (a) the first deliveries into Iranian custody of the spares referred to in my reply to the hon. Member's question relating to the last 12 months; (b) a small quantity of vehicle and training equipment spares delivered in 1982.

Royal Dockyards

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the dates of the proposed visits to Her Majesty's royal dockyards at Rosyth and Plymouth, Devonport, of the contractors who have expressed an interest in tendering for commercial management.

Mr. Norman Lamont: There has already been a number of visits by companies to each of the dockyards. Further visits are expected but precise dates have yet to be agreed between the companies concerned and the dockyards.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish a table showing for 1987-88 and subsequent years for which figures are available, his latest estimate of the savings from dockyard commercial management.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Estimates of savings remain in line with those given by my right hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Defence Procurement on 23 July 1985 at column 497.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will indicate his working assumption for the range of profit margins assumed in the award of contracts for the refitting of naval vessels under his proposed scheme of commercial management.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The rate of profit for work which the royal dockyards will be competing in open competition with other yards in the private sector will, of course, not be known. So far as non-competitive work is concerned, the pricing will be on a risk basis under Government profit formula arrangements, employing the appropriate rate of profit as recommended at the time by the Review Board for Government contracts.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is his latest estimate of the cost of consultancy fees in the preparation of studies on commercial management for the royal dockyards.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The latest estimate of the cost of consultancies so far engaged to undertake studies on commercial management for the royal dockyards is £2·2 million.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will agree to make available the tender documents to be issued when applications for the award of the franchises for managing the royal dockyards are invited.

Mr. Norman Lamont: It is not the normal practice to publish tender documents, and those in respect of the royal dockyards will contain classified information. However, it is our intention to publish as much information as is consistent with national security.

Rosyth Dockyard

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place a copy of the Touche-Ross report on the Rosyth dockyard, part 2, in the Library.

Mr. Norman Lamont: No. As I told the hon. Gentleman on 25 October, at column 276, phase II of the Touche-Ross report, which has just been completed, is classified. Copies are, however, being made available to the Select Committee on Defence.

Written Answers to Questions

Tuesday 19 November 1985

WALES

Toxic Refuse (Dumping)

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales which locations in Wales are licensed for the dumping of toxic refuse.

Mr. Mark Robinson: Under the Control of Pollution Act 1974 responsibility for licensing waste disposal sites in Wales rests with district councils as waste disposal authorities. District councils are required to maintain a register for inspection by the public of all sites in their areas licenced to receive controlled waste which includes special or toxic waste. Up to date records are not held centrally, but some information about waste disposal sites licensed to receive controlled waste is included in the hazardous waste inspectorate's 1984 register of facilities for the disposal of controlled wastes in England and Wales, a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Departmental Files

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Wales what arrangements operate for the logging of those who have access to (a) computer and (b) manual files kept by his Department on individuals; and if he will describe the procedures in operation for both categories.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Specific guidelines on security of automatically processed data in Government Departments are observed. They are contained in "Protection of Information in Computer Systems" and "Central Government Code of Practice No. 21", issued by the Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency, which give recommended procedures to safeguard data in computer installations. Copies of these guidelines have been placed in the House Library.

Access to manual files on individuals is strictly limited to those who need to see them in the course of their duties.

Trawsfynydd and Wylfa Power Stations

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had in the current year with the Central Electricity Generating Board concerning the future of the Trawsfynydd and Wylfa nuclear power stations and the possible implications on employment in Gwynedd.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Following discussions with the chairman of the Central Electricity Generating Board last year, I am keeping in close touch with the studies into potential sites at Trawsfynydd and Wylfa which the board announced in March.

Welsh Language (Newspapers)

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales whether he has now received any approaches for assistance from his Department towards helping to maintain the present level of Welsh language weekly newspapers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: I have received several letters about the particular problems facing two Welsh language weekly newspapers, and have informed the correspondents that I cannot hold out any prospect of financial assistance from this Department.

Sheep Farmers

Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to safeguard the interest of sheep farmers in Wales during the next year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Support arrangements for the sheepmeat sector in the next year will be considered as part of the 1986 common agricultural policy price-fixing negotiations. The sheepmeat regime has brought substantial benefits to Wales and in the last marketing year 1984-85 payments of £39·8 million were made to Welsh sheep producers. In addition in 1984 payments to producers in Wales for sheep under the hill livestock compensatory allowances scheme totalled £17·9 million.

Farm Workers (Statistics)

Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many farm workers have left the agriculture industry in Wales during the last three years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: During the period 1982-85, the number of full and part-time hired workers on holdings in Wales fell by 736. the number of family workers, however is provisionally estimated to have risen by 142 and that of farmers, partners, directors and managers by 1,875. The total labour force (excluding farmers wives but including casual and seasonal workers) is provisionally estimated to have risen by 2,026 in this period.

Scab

Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many cases of scab have been notified in Wales during the last 12 months; what were the corresponding figures for the last 10 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The table gives the number of outbreaks of sheep scab in Wales in each of the past 10 years, each year beginning on 1 July.

Year	Outbreaks

Agriculture and Development and Advisory Service

Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for Wales when he last met the principals of Wales' agriculture college, Aberystwyth, to discuss the implications of the proposed changes in the advisory services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: I have not recently met the principal of the Welsh agricultural college. The Agriculture and Development and Advisory Service is, however, in close liaison with the college over the preparation of advisory packages which the college propose offering to farmers in Wales.

Severe Weather Conditions (Production Loss)

Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for Wales what was the estimated loss of agricultural production in Wales due to the bad weather conditions during the current year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Figures are not yet available on which to make an accurate assessment of the effect of the poor weather experienced during the summer months. It is clear however that both output and costs will have been adversely affected.

SCOTLAND

Solvent Abuse

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report on a local government area basis, and by sex (a) the numbers of young people detected abusing solvents since the Solvent Abuse (Scotland) Act 1983 came into effect and (b) the numbers of those detected that were referred to children's panels.

Mr. John MacKay: The numbers of cases of solvent abuse brought to the attention of the police have been as follows:

	Number
1983 (July-December)	1,933
1984	1,192

The numbers of referrals to reporters and children's hearings are as follows. Figures for 1985 will not be available until mid-1986.

Sunday Trading

Mr. Skeet asked the Secretary of State for Scotland for how long Sunday trading has operated in Scotland; and what assessment he makes of the current social impact.

Mr. John MacKay: There has been no general statutory prohibition on Sunday trading in Scotland in any post-Union legislation. Such patterns of Sunday trading as have developed have done so in response to local demand and local opinion. My right hon. Friend accepts the assessment of the social impact of Sunday trading in Scotland made by the National Consumer Council and by the Auld committee of inquiry into proposals to amend the Shops Act, set out in paragraphs 238 and 243 of the Auld report (Cmnd. 9376).

Multiple Occupation Houses

Mr. Fletcher asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will introduce legislation to enable local authorities in Scotland to license houses in multiple occupation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: Powers are already available to local authorities, under the Housing (Scotland) Act 1966, to introduce a registration scheme for houses in multiple occupation. In addition, they have powers of control under the Housing (Management of Houses and Buildings in Multiple Occupation) (Scotland) Regulations 1964 and the power to make byelaws under the Public Health (Scotland) Act 1897.

Sexual Assaults

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when revised guidance will be issued to the police on the investigation of complaints of sexual assault; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Younger: Revised guidance on the investigation of complaints of sexual assault was issued to the police service on 14 November 1985 in the light of the recent Scottish Office social research study, "Investigating Sexual Assault", and of consultations with the Association of Chief Police Officers (Scotland), the Rape Crisis Centres, and Scottish Women's Aid.

The new guidance emphasises the need for victims to be treated tactfully and sympathetically and covers a number of important areas including medical examinations, questioning about previous sexual history, and follow-up action.

I am arranging for a copy of the guidance to be placed in the Library of the House.

ENERGY

Departmental Files

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Energy what arrangements operate for the logging of those who have access to (a) computer and (b) manual files kept by his Department on individuals; and if he will describe the procedures in operation for both categories.

Mr. Peter Walker: All information about individuals held by my Department is protected by the "need to know" principle. The guidelines issued by the Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency, "Protection of Information in Computer Systems" and "Central Government Code of Practice No. 21", are observed. There are copies of these guidelines in the House Library. Privacy markings restrict access to written information about individuals, manual files are registered and their movements are logged.

Miners' Pensions

Mr. Mason asked the Secretary of State for Energy what estimate he has made of the numbers of mineworkers who have not paid their national insurance contributions for 12 months and may have their redundant mineworkers' pension affected; whether he has now considered what legislative changes are necessary to safeguard their benefits; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: The number of mineworkers to be made redundant next year will depend on the National Coal Board's plans for the continued reorganisation of the industry. My right hon. Friend and I are considering carefully what might need to be done in relation to those whose benefits under the redundant mineworkers payments scheme would be affected by failure to pay national insurance contributions during the strike.

Sizewell Inquiry

Dr. Twinn asked the Secretary of State for Energy what is his latest estimate of the date when the report of the Sizewell inquiry will be submitted to him.

Mr. Peter Walker: The timing of the report is a matter for the inspector. However, the inspector has informed me that, following a recent review of progress, he does not now expect to be able to deliver his main recommendations until the spring of 1986.

PRIME MINISTER

Middle East

Q33. Mr. Latham asked the Prime Minister when she intends to hold further discussions with King Hussein and Mr. Shimon Peres regarding the peace process in the middle east.

The Prime Minister: I keep in regular contact with King Hussein, but have no plans for an early meeting. I look forward to welcoming Mr. Peres to London early next year.

Regional Economic Policy (Wales)

Q59. Mr. Wigley asked the Prime Minister if she will now give further consideration to the effectiveness of regional economic policy as it is working in Wales.

The Prime Minister: The current arrangements are being kept under regular review following the measures announced last November which resulted from a thorough and wide ranging examination of regional economic policy and its impact throughout the country.

Fraserburgh

Q95. Mr. McQuarrie asked the Prime Minister if she will pay an official visit to Fraserburgh.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Engagements

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Prime Minister if she will list her engagements for Tuesday 19 November.

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Prime Minister if she will list her engagements for Tuesday 19 November.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in this House I shall be having further meetings later today. This evening I shall be giving a reception for Fellows of the Royal Society.

NATIONAL FINANCE

National Health Service

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received on the current level of funding of the National Health Service.

Mr. Lawson: I have received a number of representations on the current level of funding of the NHS.

PAYE (Computerisation)

Mr. Ashdown asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he is satisfied with the progress being made in the computerisation of the pay-as-you-earn (COP) project; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moore: Yes. The COP project is proceeding as planned, both as regards cost and as regards timing.

As at the end of October, 6,000 visual display units had been installed in 122 tax offices. Thirty-eight of the offices had completed the transfer of their paper records to the computer. The remainder were in course of making the transfer. Further tax offices are being connected to the COP system at around 20 each month. Taxpayer records are being transferred to the computer at a rate of over 1 million each month.

TSB (Scotland) Sale (Judgment)

Mr. Craigen asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the consequences of the ruling by a Scottish judge yesterday that the assets of TSB (Scotland) belong to the depositors and what course of action the Treasury intends to take on the matter.

Mr. Ian Stewart [pursuant to his reply, 13 November 1985, c. 564]: This morning the Treasury lodged formal notice of appeal to the Inner House.

TRANSPORT

Departmental Files

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Transport what arrangements operate for the logging of those who have access to (a) computer and (b) manual files kept by his Department on individuals; and if he will describe the procedures in operation for both categories.

Mr. Ridley: In the case of computer files containing information on individuals, specific guidelines on security of automatically processed data in Government Departments are observed. They are contained in "Protection of Information in Computer Systems" and Central Government Code of Practice No. 21", issued by the Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency, which give recommended procedures to safeguard data in computer installations. Copies of these guidelines have been placed in the House library.

Manual files on individual members of staff are open only to the personnel officers responsible for those staff and to other officers with a "specific need to know".

Trunk Road Improvements

Sir Eldon Griffiths asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish in the Official Report a list of the trunk road improvements completed and started in Norfolk, Suffolk, Essex and Cambridgeshire during the years 1979 to 1985, inclusive, indicating the cost of each.

Mrs. Chalker: Trunk road improvements including motorway construction costing £1 million or more and either completed or started between 1979 and 1985 are as follows:

Route	County	Start Year	Completion Year	Costs £m

Concessionary Fares

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he proposes to issue guidelines to local authorities about concessionary fare subsidy payments arising from the Transport Act.

Mr. David Mitchell: Regulations on the reimbursement of operators will be laid early in 1986, and we shall at that stage be issuing a circular and further explanatory notes on all aspects of concessionary fares schemes.

A127

Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for Transport what was the number of (a) fatal and (b) non-fatal accidents on the A127 in 1985.

Mrs. Chalker: Only data for the January to June period are available for 1985. There was one fatal accident and 107 serious or slight injury accidents.

London Airports (Traffic Distribution)

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Transport why the Government requested the Civil Aviation Authority to review the present rules for traffic distribution between the London airports; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I refer the hon. Member to paragraphs 11.9 and 11.10 of the White Paper "Airports Policy" (Cmnd. 9542) published in June. These explain why the Government consider that the roles played by each of London's airports (Heathrow, Gatwick, Stansted and Luton) should be examined in detail in consultation with the civil aviation industry and its users. The White Paper announced the Government's intention to invite the Civil Aviation Authority to review the existing traffic distribution rules for London and to advise him on the need for any changes. The authority has just published a consultation document, "Air traffic distribution in the London area", a copy of which is in the Library.

Public Utilities Street Works Act 1950

Mr. Dicks asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to publish the report of the review of the Public Utilities Street Works Act 1950.

Mrs. Chalker: The report of Professor Michael Horne's review of the Public Utilities Street Works Act 1950 is being published this afternoon. Copies are being placed in the Library. I should like to thank Professor Horne and his two colleagues, Mr. Norman Ellis and Mr. Derek Ford, for the very considerable effort they have clearly put into preparing this report, which applies to England, Wales and Scotland. They have made a thorough and fundamental examination of the problems associated with utility roadworks and have made wide-ranging recommendations. I am now inviting comments on the report, which is available from HMSO, to be submitted not later than 28 February 1986.

East London Road Assessment Study

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to publish the report of the East London road assessment study.

Mrs. Chalker: Lack of co-operation from the GLC is delaying the first stage report on identification of problems, which will not now be published until 1986.

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many people, in each borough, have put views forward to the consultants undertaking the East London road assessment study; and how many invitations were issued.

Mrs. Chalker: I understand that the consultants distributed nearly 200,000 leaflets inviting views, placed nine general advertisements in the local and London-wide press, and sent at least 535 letters to local groups. In addition invitations to contribute were sent to all London Boroughs, the city of London, and the GLC and various national bodies and organisations.

I expect information on the responses received by the consultants to be contained in the report of the first stage of the study which will be published in 1986.

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many submissions have been received from London borough councils on the subject of the East London road assessment study.

Mrs. Chalker: Regrettably, the four London boroughs covered by the study area decided not to co-operate with the consultants or take part in the studies. I understand that so far the consultants have received submissions from three other London boroughs.

M25

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish the monthly peak hour and night time traffic flows on the M25 between South Mimms and the Dartford tunnel for each month since February.

Mrs. Chalker: The only location on the M25 between South Mimms and the Dartford tunnel where figures are available from continuous monitoring for the whole period is at Ockendon. The figures are contained in the table.

A1, Holloway Road

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Transport what are the peak and night time traffic flow figures for the A1, Holloway road, since the opening of the north-east section of the M25.

Mrs. Chalker: I have no current figures for traffic flows on this stretch of road, which is currently the responsibility of the GLC, but I have asked for this information to be contained in the report on the first stage of the East London assessment study next year.

Metropolitan Roads Trunking Order 1985

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport when his Department expects to have fully considered the views of London boroughs on the Metropolitan Roads Trunking Order 1985.

Mrs. Chalker: I am not able at this stage to say how long it will take to give full and proper consideration to the views of the London boroughs.

British Airways

Mr. Favell asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he has received any report from the Civil Aviation Authority about the circumstances surrounding the collapse of the starboard undercarriage of a British Airways aircraft at Copenhagen on 12 November 1985.

Mr. Michael Spicer [pursuant to the reply, 18 November 1985]: At the Danish authorities' request, the investigation will be conducted by my Department's chief inspector of accidents. The chief inspector will produce a report in due course. Any safety recommendations arising from the investigation will be passed as they arise to the Civil Aviation Authority, which has the statutory responsibility for ensuring the safety of British registered aircraft.

Mr. Favell asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he has had any recent consultations with the CAA about the servicing and maintenance procedures of British Airways aircraft, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Spicer [pursuant to the reply, 18 November 1985]: The Civil Aviation Authority, which has the statutory responsibility for ensuring the safety of aircraft, inform me that it is satisfied with British Airways' methods and procedures for servicing and maintenance of aircraft.

Australasia (Ministerial Visit)

Mr. Thornton asked the Secretary of State for Transport what was the purpose of the recent visit by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Worcestershire, South (Mr. Spicer) to Australasia; what progress was made towards greater liberalisation of the London to Autstralia route via Singapore; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer [pursuant to the reply, 14 November 1985, c. 268]: The purpose of my visit to Australasia was to explore the scope for greater liberalisation of air services, especially on fares. I made various proposals to this effect to the Australian Government. Agreement has since been reached on the introduction of additional capacity of both BA and Qantas; the remaining proposals are also being pursued at official level.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Parliamentary Travel (Cost)

Mr. Dubs asked the Lord Privy Seal what has been the cost of parliamentary travel within the United Kingdom, excluding journeys between Westminster, the constituency and hon. Members' homes, for each year since the scheme began; and what is the estimated cost of administering these arrangements.

Mr. Biffen: The cost of travel on parliamentary business by hon. Members within the United Kingdom under the extended travel arrangements authorised by resolution of the House on 4 March 1980 for each year since the scheme began is as follows:

1981-82	14,079
1982-83	27,202
1983-84	21,650
1984-85	49,375

* To 31 October 1985.

These figures do not include the cost of journeys undertaken by Select Committees collectively or by hon. Members between Westminster, their constituencies, their registered homes and within their constituency.

The increase in costs from 1983-84 to 1984-85 is due to the fact that hon. Members have been making greater use of the extended travel arrangements and partly also to the enhanced motor mileage allowance.

The administration of these arrangements is subsumed within the duties of the staff responsible for all travelling facilities available to hon. Members, their spouses and supporting staff, and as such is not separately costed.

Staff

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission, if he will detail the results of his monitoring of the ethnic composition of staff employed at the Palace of Westminster.

Mr. Beith: There has not so far been a survey of the ethnic composition of staff employed by the House of Commons Commission. However, in July this year the commission agreed that the Board of Management should enter into consultation with the trade union side of the House of Commons Whitley Committee with a view to introducing a system of ethnic monitoring in the House Departments covering existing staff, new entrants and future applicants for employment in non-industrial grades. The question of including industrial staff will be considered when details are received of the arrangements for such staff in the Civil Service.

The commission also agreed that the consultations should proceed on the basis of the questionnaire used for the purpose of ethnic monitoring in the Civil Service. I understand that the head of the Administration Department has subsequently written to the secretary of the trade union side inviting discussions between management and unions on this matter.

EMPLOYMENT

Youth Training Scheme

Ms. Clare Short asked the Paymaster General how many black and white trainees there were on each youth training scheme in the Birmingham and Solihull area at the latest available date.

Mr. Trippier: The Manpower Services Commission is urgently considering the extent to which information provided by managing agents and sponsors on the ethnic background of trainees on the youth training scheme can be made available. I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as I am in a position to do so.

Ms. Clare Short asked the Paymaster General if he will provide the best available information on the academic qualifications of (a) black and (b) white trainees on entry to the youth training schemes.

Mr. Trippier: Reliable, comprehensive information is not available. I shall, however, write to the hon. Member with the details of some information we have.

Mr. Skinner asked the Paymaster General if he has any information that would lead him to revise his estimate of nine deaths on the youth training scheme from 1 April 1983 to 30 June 1985, as given to the hon. Member for Bolsover on 23rd October, Official Report, columns 168-170; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: No. The nine fatalities referred to in my reply of 23 October included a fatality which occured in Scotland on 26 February this year and which was the subject of a fatal accident inquiry held on 14 November. If the inquiry finds that the death did not arise out of or in connection with a training or work activity, the fatality will not be included in the Manpower Services Commission's future accident figures for the youth training scheme. I will write to the hon. Member when I know the outcome of the inquiry.

Mr. Skinner asked the Paymaster General if he will list the number of cases in which the families of youth training scheme trainees who died on youth training schemes were sent cheques for £78 by the Manpower Services Commission in lieu of industrial death benefit payments from the Department of Health and Social Security.

Mr. Trippier: Since the youth training scheme was introduced on 1 April 1983, the parents of six young people have been paid the equivalent of industrial death benefit by the Manpower Services Commission. In five cases the maximum payment of £78 was made and in one case a payment of £52 (the maximum for a single parent) was made.

Mr. Skinner asked the Paymaster General if he will provide the date of death of each youth training scheme trainee since 1 April 1983 and the cause of death in each case.

Mr. Trippier: The following is a list of fatalities on the youth training scheme since 1 April 1983:

Date of Fatality	Cause of Fatality
27 June 1983	Road traffic accident
7 September 1983	Accident on residential outdoor activity
12 October 1983	Forklift truck accident
1 February 1984	Tractor accident
27 July 1984	Road traffic accident
22 August 1984	Road traffic accident
24 September 1984	Dumper truck overturned
12 February 1985	Severe burns
26 February 1985	The outcome of a fatal accident inquiry into this death is awaited to establish the exact cause
29 July 1985	Electrocution
20 August 1985	Road traffic accident

Mr. Corbett asked the Paymaster-General (1) what is, by each Manpower Services Commission area, the size of the budget and the allocation of premium places for youth training scheme mode B for the year from April 1986; and how this compares with the provision for each year since the scheme was introduced;

(2) what is the total Manpower Services Commission budget for 1986-87 for the provision of mode B youth training scheme places; how many places this is expected to provide; and what were the figures for each of the last two financial years.

Mr. Trippier: It is not possible to break down expenditure by area, but the tables show the allocation by area of approved places in mode B1 community projects and training workshops for 1984-85 and 1985-86. Under the two-year youth training scheme from April 1986 the distinction between modes will disappear, but existing mode B1 providers will generally be eligible for the premium rate of funding. The national planning total of approved first-year premium places for 1986-87 is 51,000 (excluding information technology centres). In addition there will be approved second year places, but their number, and the allocations to areas, have yet to be determined. Planned spending on premium places in 1986-87 is also therefore undecided, but in 1983-84, 84,637 places were approved in community projects and training workshops, and expenditure was some £105 million; in 1984-85, 65,195 approved places were planned, and some £217 million spent.

Mr. Wilson asked the paymaster-General if he will publish in the Official Report a breakdown of the regional variations which exist of the percentage of youth training scheme places assessed for performance.

Mr. Trippier [pursuant to his reply, 18 November 1985, c. 38]: The percentage of approved 1984-85 places covered by programmes assessed in each region by the end of July 1985 was as follows:

Region	Places assessed per cent.
Scotland	97
Northern	99
North West	97
Yorks and Humberside	97
Midlands	97
Wales	99
South West	92
South East	96
London	95
Great Britain	96

One hundred per cent. coverage is not required because some approved places remain unfilled.

British Conference and Exhibition Centres

Mr. Grist asked the Paymaster General if he will arrange for an exhibition relating to the British Conference and Exhibition Centres export council to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. Trippier: I understand that arrangements have been made with the authorities of the House for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall. My right hon. and noble Friend will be opening the exhibition at 6.30 pm on Monday 25 November.

Information Technology

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Paymaster General what Manpower Services Commission funds have been hitherto specifically earmarked for training in information technology; whether there are any plans to increase the sums made available for such training; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The Government have asked the Manpower Services Commission to give priority to training in the new technologies including information technology. The commission has specifically allocated some £37 million in 1985-86 for training in information technology. This includes training through information technology centres, the threshold computer scheme, priority skills training and access to information technology. In addition the youth training scheme includes an introduction to information technology in all its programmes and priority is given in adult training schemes to the new technologies.

Enterprise Agencies

Mr. Stephen Ross asked the Paymaster General how he intends to disburse the extra £2·5 million support for enterprise agencies announced on 12 November.

Mr. Trippier: The detailed arrangements for the new financial support to be available to local enterprise agencies in 1986-87 will be announced shortly.

Labour Statistics

Dr. Cunningham asked the Paymaster General if he will give a detailed breakdown of the number of unemployed claimants in the Copeland parliamentary constituency using the most recent available figures, analysed by sex and by the age of the unemployed and duration of unemployment.

Mr. Alan Clark: The following information is in the Library. The table shows the number of unemployed claimants in the Copeland parliamentary constituency as at 10 October 1985, analysed by sex, age and duration of unemployment.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Paymaster General how many people are unemployed in Great Grimsby; what was the equivalent figure in May 1979; and what is the percentage increase.

Mr. Alan Clark: On 10 October 1985, the number of unemployed claimants in the Great Grimsby parliamentary constituency was 6,697. Statistics of unemployment for parliamentary constituencies are derived from the new ward-based system and are available only from June 1983.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Paymaster General how many school leavers are registered as job-seekers in Great Grimsby at present; and how many school leavers were registered as job-seekers for the same months in 1979 and 1982.

Mr. Alan Clark: On 10 October 1985 the number of school leavers registered as job-seekers at Grimsby careers office was 525. The corresponding figure for October 1982 was also 525. Figures for 1979 have not been retained.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Paymaster General how many people are currently estimated to be self-employed in Great Grimsby.

Mr. Alan Clark: Estimates of the number of self-employed persons in local areas are available only from the censuses of population. The 1981 census identified 2,495 self-employed persons resident in Great Grimsby.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Paymaster General how many people have found places on Manpower Services Commission training courses in Great Grimsby in each year since 1979.

Mr. Trippier: The information requested is not available for the constituency of Great Grimsby. However, the following table shows the number of entrants to adult and youth training schemes run by the Manpower Services Commission in the Grimsby local authority district, from 1979 to date.

* Made up of job training scheme, training for enterprise, and wider opportunities training programme.

† Figures for the local grant to employers and access to information technology schemes are not available for the Grimsby local authority district. Grimsby will however benefit from the 1,350 people it is planned to train through these schemes on Humberside in 1985-86.

‡ These figures relate to the planned number of entrants.

Community Programme

Mr. Lawler asked the Paymaster General how many industrial or commercial sponsors there are of community programme schemes in Bradford.

Mr. Alan Clark: None, at present. However, we are seeking to encourage industrial and commercial employers in all areas to become more involved with the community programme. In Bradford, some employers have already provided financial assistance for specific projects, which has been of much benefit.

Mr. Skeet asked the Paymaster General whether he proposes to seek to amend the Mines and Quarries Act 1954.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Yes. The Health and Safety Commission is reviewing the Mines and Quarries Act 1954 and associated legislation. It is intended to replace them with a series of new regulations and supporting codes of practice. The commission has so far issued consultative documents on three subjects. It will be putting forward proposals in due course.

Mogul Foods Ltd., Portsmouth

Mr. Hancock asked the Paymaster General if he will institute an investigation into the case of a loan, given under the small firms loan guarantee scheme, to Mogul Foods Limited, Portsmouth, on 5 August 1982; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: No. The lender in this case made a claim on the Government guarantee, which was paid in April 1983. My Department has no reason to doubt that the guarantee and the subsequent claim were valid under the terms of the scheme.

Work Permits

Mr. Baldry asked the Paymaster General whether a decision has yet been made to continue after 1985 the special annual quota of work permits for workers from the dependent territories whose level of skill is below that required by the general work permit scheme.

Mr. Alan Clark: Yes. It has been decided that the quota for 1986 will be 200—the same as this year. Within the figure of 200 no more than 150 permits will be allowed for any one territory.

Businesses (Statistics)

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Paymaster General if he will list, for each standard region, the latest available figures for the number of new business starts and business stops since 1979.

Mr. Trippier [pursuant to his reply, 18 November 1985, c. 40]: The latest available figures were published in British Business on 2 November 1984. A copy has been placed in the Library.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Terrorism

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give details of persons wanted in connection with terrorist offences committed since and including 1969 who have been extradited from the Irish Republic to Northern Ireland and vice versa.

Mr. Scott: Since the first warrants involving terrorist-type offences were forwarded in 1971, three persons have been extradited from the Republic of Ireland to Northern Ireland and 31 persons have been extradited from Northern Ireland to the Republic of Ireland.

Housing Executive Estate Roads

Mr. Clifford Forsythe asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the number of Housing Executive estate roads completed prior to 1 November 1984 in accordance with Department of Environment standards which have not yet been adopted.

Mr. Needham: Three.

Equal Pay

Mr. Stephen Ross asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what has been the increase in the number of complaints under equal pay legislation in Northern Ireland following the recent implementation of the amendment regulations in 1984; and what extra financial provision has been made to enable the Commission to fulfil its extra statutory obligations.

Dr. Boyson: Before the introduction of the Equal Pay (Amendment) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 1984 the number of inquiries/complaints to the Equal Opportunities Commission for Northern Ireland under the equal pay legislation averaged 26 a year. It increased in 1984-85 by 16 to 42. During the seven-month period to 31 October 1985 there were 48 inquiries/complaints.

In 1984-85 the commission received £250,000, an increase of 9·6 per cent. over its 1983-84 provision of £228,000. The provision for 1985-86 is £272,500, a 19·5 per cent. increase over 1983-84. The detailed allocation of the commission's budget (including any annual increase) across its various activities, is primarily a matter for the commission.

Voluntary Schools (Vested Land)

Mr. McCusker asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much land has been vested on behalf of voluntary schools under article 10 of the Northern Ireland Education Order 1978; and whether any such scheme is presently under consideration.

Mr. Scott: No land has been vested and no proposals are at present under consideration.

Republic of Ireland

Mr. William Ross asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what (i) questions and (ii) other points about administration in the Province have been raised with him by the Government of the Republic of Ireland in (a) 1984 and (b) 1985; on which of them he has taken action as a result of the representations received, stating the grounds in each case; and why he took no action on each of those on which action was not taken.

Mr. King [pursuant to his reply, 18 November 1985]: Exchanges between Governments are generally conducted on a confidential basis and it is not, therefore, our normal practice to report on such contacts to the House.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Open University

15. Mr. Alex Carlisle asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many students are now registered with the Open university as part of the associate programme; and how the figure compares with previous years.

Mr. Brooke: In 1985 about 9,800 students were registered as associate students taking single courses from the university's undergraduate programme. In addition about 49,500 were registered on continuing education courses or purchased continuing education packs of self-study materials. In both cases the number of students is higher than in previous years.

Teachers' Dispute

16. Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many days of education have been lost by schoolchildren as a result of strike action.

Mr. Dunn: Precise information is not available. However, I am aware that a very large number of pupil days have been lot or interrupted by industrial action taken by the three largest school teacher unions. Strike action has not in fact been the union's major weapon. Striking results in loss of pay and the unions have sought to minimise such a direct penalty by engaging in selective strikes of short duration and by taking other forms of action specifically designed to cause maximum disruption of the schools with minimum cost to those doing the disruption.

25. Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement about the current teachers' pay dispute.

26. Mr. Shersby asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the prospects for a settlement of the teachers' dispute.

29. Dr. Michael Clark asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement about the current teachers' dispute.

30. Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the teachers' pay dispute.

34. Mr. Roy Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the current teachers' dispute.

35. Mr. Andrew MacKay asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the teachers' dispute.

43. Mrs. Currie asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the teachers' dispute.

44. Mr. David Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the teachers' pay dispute.

47. Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what action he is taking to seek to end the teachers' industrial dispute.

48. Mr. Madel asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the latest position in the teachers' pay dispute.

50. Mr. Baldry asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the teachers' pay dispute.

53. Mr. Leigh asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the teachers' dispute.

57. Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what progress has been made in resolving the teachers' dispute.

Mr. Spencer asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will make a statement on the current position in the teachers' dispute.

Sir Keith Joseph: I refer my hon. Friends and the hon. Members to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Easington (Mr. Dormand) and my hon. Friends the Members for Cannock and Burntwood (Mr. Howarth), Erith and Crayford (Mr. Evennett), Teignbridge (Mr. Nicholls), South Suffolk (Mr. Yeo) and Rutland and Melton (Mr. Latham).

49. Mr. Speller asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list, by local education authority, the number of teachers who have been disciplined as a result of absenting themselves during the current teachers' dispute; and if he will list the number of pupils excluded or expelled from school for demonstrating or indicating dissent with the actions of their teachers.

Sir Keith Joseph: I understand that all local education authorities withhold pay in respect of absences due to strikes. Detailed information about disciplinary action against either teachers or pupils is not available centrally; but it does appear that teachers are able to achieve their objective of maximum disruption of education at minimum cost to themselves.

56. Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he last met representatives of the teaching unions to discuss the present pay dispute.

Sir Keith Joseph: I met representatives of the National Union of Teachers on 7 November, at their request, to discuss the pay dispute.

Mr. Waller asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what effect he expects the dispute involving the teaching profession to have on his plans to reform the secondary school examination structure.

Mr. Chris Patten: We have no reports of significant disruption to the preparations for the introduction of the general certificate of secondary education. The majority of teachers will not become involved in the training programme for the GCSE until next year.

CERN

18. Mr. Heathcoat-Amory asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he intends to reduce Britain's contribution to the CERN project.

Mr. Brooke: The Kendrew report recommended that the United Kingdom should reduce the size of its subscription to CERN by 25 per cent. by 1991. My right hon. Friend is considering that recommendation, and the report's other recommendations.

Student Support

19. Mr. Squire asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will review the system of student support.

Mr. Brooke: My right hon. Friend announced on 12 November at column 113 that, since the possibility of replacing maintenance grants wholly or partly with loans had been ruled out at the present time by the Government, he did not consider that any useful purpose would be served by the publication of a consultative paper on student support.

Higher Education (Grants)

20. Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will undertake a survey to establish the number of school leavers who attained adequate educational standards for acceptance for further and higher educational courses in 1985, but who would not take up their places on such courses because of their inability to secure a grant sufficient to enable them to pursue these courses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: The Office of Population Censuses and Surveys has been commissioned by the Department to carry out a survey of young people's intentions to enter higher education; and the Department has also commissioned, jointly with the Department of Employment and the Manpower Services Commission, a youth cohort study which will focus on the various routes taken by 16 to 18-year-olds through education, training, and the labour market. An important part of both surveys concerns the decisions made by those who, despite being suitably qualified, did not enter further or higher education.

Higher Education (Green Paper)

21. Mr. Hirst asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received on the Green Paper on higher education.

Mr. Brooke: As I said in my answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Eastleigh (Sir D. Price) on 14 November at column 269, my right hon. Friend has no plans to make a statement about responses to the Green Paper on higher education until the Government make the further statement of policy on higher education promised in the Green Paper itself.

GCSE

22. Mr. Livsey asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will give a progress report on the proposed introduction of the GCSE examination system.

24. Mr. Stern asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he is satisfied with progress towards the introduction of GCSE examinations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: Our plans for the introduction of the GCSE are at present on course. The GCSE examining groups and the LEAs are well advanced in their preparations for the national programme of in-service training. In readiness for these training seminars, teachers' guides and videos will be made available to schools and colleges early in January next year. Teachers are already in a position separately to begin their own preparations for the new examination courses.

31. Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if the proposed new examination for 16-year-olds is at a satisfactory stage of development; and if schools will be adequately funded to allow the relevant courses to be pursued.

Mr. Chris Patten: Preparations for the introduction of the GCSE, including the development of syllabuses for the new examinations are on course. The Government's expenditure plans for 1986-87 give some scope for authorities to redeploy their resources towards policies to which they wish to give priority, including the GCSE, provided they contain costs and take advantage of opportunities for efficiency savings.

Assisted Places Scheme

23. Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many pupils have benefited from the assisted places scheme since it was introduced; and what has been the cost to his Department.

Mr. Dunn: Up to the end of the last school year, 18,724 pupils had benefited from the assisted places scheme. The total cost of the scheme to the Department up to the end of the last financial year was £48·9 million.

Colleges of Higher Education (Status)

27. Mr. Marlow asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the issues he is taking into consideration when assessing whether a college of higher education should receive polytechnic status.

Mr. Brooke: My right hon. Friend has indicated that he would welcome advice from the National Advisory Body for Public Sector Higher Education on the addition of further institutions to the original list designated as polytechnics following publication of the 1966 White Paper "A Plan for Polytechnics and Other Colleges", including the criteria which might govern any such addition.

Agricultural Research Council

28. Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has had about cuts in the Agricultural Research Council budget; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: Since the announcement made on 22 January 1985 by my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food of a proposed reduction in the public expenditure provision for research, development and advisory services funded by the Agriculture Departments in 1986-87 and 1987-88, my right hon. Friend has received representations from the chairman of the Agricultural and Food Research Council (AFRC) concerning the possible consequences for the AFRC and particularly for the research it conducts using funds from the Department's science budget. The Department has also received 37 letters from hon. Members and other interested parties directly or via the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food.

The grant-in-aid from the Department's science budget to the AFRC in 1985-86 is £50·3 million. This includes £4·8 million to help meet the cost of AFRC's restructuring programme. Final advice on the 1986-87 allocation will be given by the Advisory Board for the Research Councils later this year and for 1987-88 a year later.

Burnham Committee

32. Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the changes he has made in the constitution of the Burnham committee.

Sir Keith Joseph: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Norwich, North (Mr. Thompson) on 7 November at column 2.

Teachers (Appraisal)

33. Mr. Alan Howarth asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on his plans to promote the professional effectiveness of teachers.

37. Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proposals he has for the assessment of teachers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: The Government intend to introduce legislation with this aim during the current session. The new Education Bill will provide for the extension of my right hon. Friend power to grant-aid in-service training for teachers. Provision will also be made to enable my right hon. Friend to require local education authorities regularly to appraise the performance of their teachers. Whether, and if so when and how, this enabling power will be used will depend on circumstances, including the extent to which progress can be made towards introducing appraisal by agreement between teachers and their employers.

University Funding

36. Mr. Beith asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what recent representations he has received from the Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals on university funding.

51. Mr. Patrick Thompson asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what discussions he has recently had with the Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals about the funding of universities.

Mr. Brooke: My right hon. Friend met the full committee of vice-chancellors and principals on 26 September to discuss a wide range of issues arising from the Green Paper on "The Development of Higher Education into the 1990s"; on 16 October he met representatives of the committee to discuss university funding and the pay of university staff.

Schoolchildren (Transport)

38. Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will now introduce free transport for all schoolchildren travelling to and from school; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: No.

Pupil-Teacher Ratios

39. Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what are the current pupil-teacher ratios in primary and secondary schools, respectively; and if he expects these to change in the next three years.

Mr. Dunn: Average pupil to teacher ratios within primary and secondary schools respectively were 22·2:1 and 16·1:1 in England in January 1985. The overall ratio of pupils to teachers nationally was at its best ever level of 17·8:1. The Government recognise that their policies for better schools imply some further limited improvement in the overall pupil to teacher ratio but the extent and pace of this improvement will depend on future public expenditure plans, changes in the cost of employing staff, and the staffing decisions of individual local authorities.

Teaching Profession (Morale)

40. Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will meet local education authorities to discuss morale in the teaching profession.

Mr. Chris Patten: Both my right hon. Friend and I hold frequent meetings with representatives of the local authority associations and of individual local authorities and we are well aware of their views on the morale of the teaching profession. My right hon. Friend is aware that they would like to lift morale and thinks that can best be done through a bargain which would simultaneously raise pay levels, improve promotion prospects, introduce a new career structure, and clarify teachers' duties.

School Inspections

41. Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how often inspections of schools are carried out in England and Wales; how the frequency of inspections in Leicestershire compares with the national average; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: The table shows, for Leicestershire and England overall, the percentage of schools and of further and higher education institutions visited by Her Majesty's inspectors in the 1984-85 academic year:

	Percentage of institutions visited
	Leicestershire	England
Schools
Autumn 1984	6	9
Spring 1985	5	8
Summer 1985	5	8
Further and Higher Education
Autumn 1984	92	40
Spring 1985	83	37
Summer 1985	75	42

Her Majesty's inspectors visits take a variety of forms and have a number of different purposes. They do not all lead to formal published reports.

University Research Funding

42. Mr. Bruce asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the future funding of research at universities.

Mr. Brooke: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that my right hon. Friend gave my hon. Friend the Member for Surrey, South-West (Mrs. Bottomley) on 12 November at columns 104-108.

Natural Environment Research Council

45. Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the work of the Natural Environment Research Council.

Mr. Brooke: Overviews of the past and likely future work of the Natural Environment Research Council are given respectively in the council's reports, which are published annually, and in its corporate plan. A copy of the council's 1983-84 report was laid before the House on 29 November 1984; a copy of its report for 1984-85 will be laid before the House on 21 November. A copy of the council's corporate plan 1985-90 (published in February 1985) is available in the Library.

Inner London Education Authority

46. Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he last met the leader of the Inner London education authority; and what subjects were discussed.

Sir Keith Joseph: My last formal meeting with the leader of the Inner London education authority took place on 19 November 1984. Subjects discussed included legislation relating to the abolition of the GLC and reconstitution of the ILEA, the new authority's tenure in county hall, the statutory procedure to be followed in opening new nursery classes, and the authority's 1985-86 budget.

Student Grants

52. Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement about the level of student grants for 1986-87.

Mr. Brooke: A statement will be made in the next few weeks.

Teachers (Civic Affairs)

54. Mr. Stan Thorne asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what action he proposes to take in the near future to improve the supply of teachers of civic affairs.

Mr. Chris Patten: Civic affairs is not identified separately as a main subject for the purposes of initial teacher training allocations, although it is possible that some training courses with the main subject in history or social studies will include some specific reference to this area. My right hon. Friend has no evidence to suggest that the demand for teachers in these latter subjects is not being met. More generally, it is now a requirement of initial training courses of all kinds that they should give students a basic understanding of the society in which their pupils are growing up.

School Hours

55. Mr. Favell asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any plans to introduce continental hours for schools.

Mr. Dunn: Local education authorities already have, and in some cases exercise, a considerable degree of flexibility in their arrangements, while complying, as they must, with the relevant provisions of the Education (Schools and Further Education) Regulations 1981.

Schools (Toilet Facilities)

58. Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will take steps to seek to ensure that all state schools are provided with modern toilet facilities.

Mr. Dunn: It is for local education authorities to decide their own priorities for capital expenditure in their schools in the light of local needs and the resources available to them.

School Playgrounds (Paint)

Mr. Roy Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will seek powers to require that only lead-free or low-lead paint is used for apparatus in school playgrounds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: No. DOE circular 22/82 "Lead in the Environment" stated that it was undesirable and unnecessary to use high lead paint on surfaces accessible to children, and advised local authorities to specify low-lead paint for schools, parks and recreation grounds. Last year the local authorities management services and computer committee (LAMSAC) made more detailed recommendations to local authorities to specify paint with a lead content no higher than the maximum permitted under the Toys (Safety) Regulations 1974, when purchasing new playground equipment or treating old apparatus.

Civil Engineering Graduates

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the number of students graduating in each of the last 10 years in civil engineering in (a) universities and (b) public sector higher education.

Mr. Brooke: The information is as follows:

Civil engineering graduates

	GB universities		*United Kingdom CNAA
	First degree	Higher degree	First degree	Higher degree

1983	1,756	659	662	6

* Degrees processed during the year, not those awarded.

Information for 1984 is not yet available.

Graduates (First Degrees)

Dr. Hampson asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will break down by subjects the number of graduates gaining first degrees in British universities and in public sector institutions for each of the last five years; and what forward projections have been made for the next five years.

Mr. Brooke: The information is given in the table below:

National Youth Advisory Council

Mr. Lawler asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he will be in a position to announce the composition of the National Youth Advisory Council.

Mr. Dunn: Professor Walter James has been appointed chairman of the National Advisory Council for the Youth Service. Invitations to others to serve have been issued and my right hon. Friend will announce the composition of the council shortly.

Pupil-Teacher Ratio (Kent)

Mr. Rowe asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the pupil-teacher ratio in Kent today, compared to the figures in 1979 and 1981.

Mr. Dunn: The overall pupil-teacher ratio in maintained schools in Kent in the years 1979, 1981 and 1985 was 20·0, 20·0 and 19·0 respectively.

University Teachers

Dr. Hampson asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether the salaries of university teachers have kept pace with the retail price index and with average earnings since 1979.

Sir Keith Joseph: Between April 1979 and April 1984 (the date of the last pay increase) pay settlements for university non-clinical academic and related staff have out-stripped the retail prices index by 9·8 per cent. and fallen behind the Average Earnings Index by 1·6 per cent.

Pupil-Teacher Ratio (Hampshire)

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how the pupil-teacher ratio in Hampshire and in Portsmouth today compares with 1975, 1979 and 1981.

Mr. Dunn: The overall pupil-teacher ratio in maintained nursery, primary and secondary schools in Hampshire in 1975, 1979, 1981 and 1985 was 20·7, 20·2, 20·0 and 19·6 respectively. Equivalent figures for Portsmouth are not available.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Tanzania

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) whether the main contractor for the Songea to Makambako road, Tanzania, has been given a deadline for the completion of the contract;

(2) when is the estimated completion date of the Songea to Makambako road, Tanzania.

Mr. Raison: The estimated completion date set in the contract was 30 November 1985, but the certificate of substantial completion was issued on 23 September 1985 and the road is to be formally opened by President Mwinyi in the presence of HRH Princess Anne on 20 November 1985.

Agricultural Development (Africa)

Mr. Allen McKay asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if it is his intention to increase Britain's contribution to the special fund for agricultural development in Africa as set up by the United Nations.

Mr. Raison: I assume that the hon. Member has in mind the special programme for African countries suffering from drought and desertification, which is being established by the international fund for agricultural development. This is a new, voluntary programme, and we have not yet made any commitment to contribute to it. My Department will consider the possibility of a United Kingdom contribution as and when the more fundamental question of the second replenishment of IFAD's basic resources has been settled.

Traditional Crops (Africa)

Mr. Allen McKay asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what the Government are doing to increase aid to research in African countries in order to increase the yield of traditional African crops.

Mr. Raison: Effective research is vital to increasing crop yields and we are seeking to improve our aid in this sector in several ways. We have already restructured the Tropical Development and Research Institute so that it can be more responsive to ODA's priority needs. We intend to maintain and if possible increase the funds allocated for agricultural research contracts. We have recently increased the contributions we make to the International Agricultural Research Centres working in Africa, particularly the International Centre for Research in the Semi-arid Tropics, which works mainly on sorghum and millets, two important traditional African crops. We also attach priority to the provision of manpower assistance and training in this field and are looking for ways of encouraging requests from African countries.

Food Production (Africa)

Mr. Allen McKay asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what amount of British aid to the African countries is used to promote increased local food production.

Mr. Raison: Since food and other forms of agricultural production are not readily distinguishable even at farm level, no separate figures for British aid to promote local food production alone are available. Our aid to agricultural and related activities in sub-Saharan Africa in 1984 totalled £66 million.

Africa (Aid)

Mr. Allen McKay asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs by how much he intends increasing the amount of British aid to African countries in order to increase their local food production.

Mr. Raison: I cannot quantify this, but we shall continue to aim to increase the aid we provide to agricultural and food production wherever we can do so to reinforce sensible recipient country policies.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Laser 558 Radio Station

Mr. Forth asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will give the circumstances surrounding the actions taken with regard to the Laser 558 radio station, and the statutory basis for such actions.

Mr. Butcher: The Department of Trade and Industry chartered a survey vessel on 8 August to observe supply traffic to the two marine broadcasting stations operating off the Essex coast. Evidence of a considerable number of possible offences has already been passed to the police both in the United Kingdom and in continental countries. Decisions on the prosecutions of United Kingdom nationals and residents for offences against the Marine Etc. Broadcasting (Offences) Act will be made by the Director of Public Prosecutions.

On 6 November, the vessel Communicator, from which Laser 558 broadcasts had been made, sailed to Harwich harbour following a generator breakdown. The Communicator requested and received escort assistance from the DTI's chartered vessel. I understand that the Communicator is at present under the control of the Admiralty marshal following action by an individual and a private company.

Mr. Forth asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will give the costs of any action taken regarding the commercial radio station Laser 558.

Mr. Butcher: The costs of the Department's surveillance operation in the North sea are around £25,000 per month, including the costs of charter and staff costs. The operation has been directed against both Radio Caroline and Radio Laser 558.

Radio Stations (International Waters)

Mr. Forth asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will explain Her Majesty's Government's attitude and policy towards independent commercial radio stations operating in international waters.

Mr. Butcher: The Government are seriously concerned at the activities of unlicensed marine broadcasters who use radio frequencies allocated for other, legitimate purposes, and whose powerful unregulated transmissions can and do cause interference to other radio users, including safety of life services. For example, helicopter navigational beacons in the North sea have been permanently disrupted by pirate transmissions on frequencies close to the beacons, and marine radio services and navigational beacons have been disrupted by faulty transmitters on individual occasions. The arrival of Radio Caroline interfered with transmissions on certain university and hospital radios, which had to change frequencies at considerable expense. The frequency 558 kHz used by Radio Laser and now in use by Radio Caroline has been allocated to BBC Radio Essex by international agreement, and existing broadcasts from Irish and German stations have suffered interference.

Frequency assignment is a complex process. The spectrum space available is allocated by international agreement and by the DTI as the nationals regulatory body. Pirate broadcasters cut across this and steal scarce spectrum to the detriment of lawful users.

The Government also have international obligations, as International Radio Regulation 2665 prohibits broadcasting from ships outside national territories. The United Kingdom is a signatory to a 1965 European convention in which signatories undertook to take steps to prevent broadcasts through legislative means.

It is open to those who wish to broadcast from within the United Kingdom to apply for Independent Broadcasting Authority franchises when these are advertised from time to time. It was also open to unlicensed broadcasters to apply for experimental community radio licences before the deadline of 31 October 1985.

Alvey Programme

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what form he expects the exploitation of software engineering work under the Alvey programme within the next year or so to take.

Mr. Butcher: We expect to see a number of items of prototype software emerging from the Alvey software engineering programme and being placed in the hands of evaluators during the next two years. These should include prototypes of the two first generation integrated project support environments (IPSES) being developed under Alvey's aspect and eclipse projects, which will become available in a number of increments, each more powerful than the previous one. There should also be a wide range of prototypes covering, for example, test specification and quality measurement, design including design with intelligent Knowledge based system support, prototyping tools, tools to support formal methods of specification, tools for documentation. Specific products relating to these will be expected to enter the market in due course.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has about approaches for the purchase of intellectual property rights arising from Alvey-funded projects, by the United States Government or United States based companies, to any of the companies or academic institutions funded under the Alvey programme.

Mr. Butcher: I have received no information about any such approaches.

Industrial Development

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what changes there have been in the financial incentives for industrial development available to firms in Great Grimsby since May 1979.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Great Grimsby is part of the Grimsby travel-to-work area which was a development area until November 1984, when it was regraded as an intermediate area following the review of regional policy. The effect of this is that firms in Great Grimsby are no longer eligible for regional development grants but remain eligible for regional selective assistance and the full range of nationally-available incentives to industry.

Sumrie plc

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if the Companies Act inquiry into Sumrie plc is still proceeding; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Channon: Inquiries are concluded and information obtained is under consideration.

Motor Vehicles (Departmental Purchases)

Mr. Williams asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many cars, vans and trucks are purchased by Government Departments each year; and what is the breakdown of these statistics by make of vehicle and by Department.

Mr. Butcher: This information is not held centrally and would only be obtainable at disproportionate cost. Each Department is responsible for purchasing its own vehicles and in the year to 30 October 1985 my Department purchased 75 vehicles comprising 28 cars (18 Austin Rover, 10 Ford), 44 vans (40 Ford, two Freight Rover, two Bedford) and three Land Rovers.

European Ferries

Mr. Bagier asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what Government assistance was sought by European Ferries to seek to place its order for two new ferries with British shipyards; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: No request for assistance has been made to my Department by European Ferries in respect of its requirement for two new ferries. My Department does assist British shipyards by way of the shipbuilding intervention fund to enable yards to offer owners attractive contract prices.

Multi-fibre Arrangement

Mr. Allen McKay asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he expects to negotiate a new multi-fibre arrangement no worse than the present arrangement in order to help the British textile industry.

Mr. Channon: I made clear the Government's position on the MFA during the debate in the House on 9 May. Discussions in the European Community on a negotiating position for both the multilateral and bilateral negotiations are likely to start in the next few weeks and we are in close touch with interested parties in the United Kingdom in preparation for these.

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement regarding progress on renewal of the multi-fibre arrangement.

Mr. Channon: Discussions in the European Community on a negotiating position for both the multilateral and bilateral negotiations are likely to start in the next few weeks and we are in close touch with interested parties in the United Kingdom in preparation for these.

Financial Aid Statistics

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish a table showing the applications for (a) regional development grants and (b) selective financial assistance in each year since 1979, and by each standard region.

Mr. Peter Morrison [pursuant to his reply, 18 November 1985, c. 23]: I regret that the information requested is not available for section 8 grants or on a regional basis for regional development grants (RDG). However, the tables show the number and value of applications for regional selective assistance (section 7) by region and the number of applications and related capital expenditure for RDG for GB only.

Trade Statistics

Mr. Fisher asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what percentage of total United Kingdom manufacturing industrial output is represented by (a) automobiles and (b) electronics in 1979 and each of the subsequent years for which statistics are available.

Mr. Butcher [pursuant to his reply, 18 November 1985, c. 21]: In 1980, the latest year for which firm figures are available, automobile output (cars, commercial vehicles and components) accounted for 5½ per cent. of all manufacturing activity while, on a broad definition, 'electronics' accounted for 6 per cent. Estimates suggest that in 1984 the contribution of the automobile industry to the manufacturing total has fallen, while that of electronics may have risen.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Criminal Trials (Juries)

Mr. Lawrence asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will take steps to change the procedural rule in criminal trials whereby a jury must stay together from the moment it begins to consider its verdict until it has arrived at a conclusion.

Mr. Mellor: We have no plans to do so.

Sikender Hyat

Ms. Clare Short asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what instructions were given to the governor of Ashford remand centre regarding the delivery of Sikender Hyat to Heathrow on Saturday 26 October to be sent back to Pakistan; what information was given to his relatives; why he was not so delivered on that date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: Following the withdrawal of the hon. Member's representations, directions for Mr. Hyat's removal to Pakistan on 26 October were given by the immigration officer on 22 October. Immigration service records indicate that a request was passed on 22 October to the prison service at Ashford remand centre to take Mr. Hyat to Harmondsworth on the morning of 26 October. Relatives of Mr. Hyat were advised on 22 and 24 October of the removal directions and came to the airport to see him before his departure. There is no record at Ashford remand centre of the receipt of the request from the immigration service; no arrangements were made to convey Mr. Hyat and it was therefore not possible to remove him as directed. New directions were given for removal on 29 October, his relatives were advised and were able to see Mr. Hyat before his departure. Apologies were offered on 26 October by the immigration service to the relatives.

We very much regret this failure in communication between the staff at Ashford remand centre and those in the immigration service. Arrangements were in hand, before this incident occurred, to discuss ways to overcome the problems of communications which had already been identified. This work will now be taken forward to try to ensure that such a mistake does not occur again.

Sunday Trading

Mr. Skeet asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has as to the number of west European countries which operate extensive Sunday trading.

Mr. Waddington: At least one West European country operates extensive Sunday trading, and all West European countries do so to some degree.

Mr. Skeet asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the number and categories of people engaged in Sunday trading in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Waddington: The Department keeps no record of the number and categories of people engaged in Sunday trading in the United Kingdom.

Brixton Prison

Mr. Irving asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many baths, showers and toilets are available in Brixton prison; how many baths or showers each prisoner is allowed each week; and how many changes of clothes each prisoner is allowed each week.

Mr. Mellor: Sixteen baths, 56 showers, 91 WCs and 54 urinals are available in Brixton prison. In general, all prisoners have access to a bath or shower daily. This routine may be varied for medical cases or for prisoners appearing at court. Prison clothing is exchanged at least once a week but more frequently if considered necessary —for example, for prisoners on kitchen parties and some other work parties. Unconvicted prisoners may wear private clothing, and this may be exchanged on visits.

Commission for Racial Equality

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish in the Official Report the terms of reference of the Welsh consultative committee of the Commission for Racial Equality.

Mr. Waddington: I am informed that the terms of reference of the Welsh consultative committee are as follows:

A. To provide a forum for consultation on policy issues referred to them by the Commission;
B. to raise, discuss and refer to the Commission for determination, policy issues which they feel the Commission should be considering;
C. in particular, to provide through discussion an insight into the effectiveness of the Commission's service delivery in the region as perceived by the consumers; and
D. to meet no more than three times a year for the purposes set out above.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of the members of the Commission for Racial Equality are designated as having special responsibilities, either on a geographical or functional basis; and if he will list these in the Official Report.

Mr. Waddington: I understand from the chairman of the commission that the allocation of special geographical responsibilities is as follows:

Mr. Lincoln Crawford	:	the south of England
Mrs. Shreela Flather	:	Wales
Mr. Alan Gayton	:	the east midlands
Dr. Farrukh Hashmi	:	the west midlands
Miss Ethel Houston	:	Scotland
Mr. Gursharan Singh Sarang	:	the north-west
Mr. Gerald Tyler	:	the north-east

The commission has four functional sub-committees whose membership is as follows:

Field Services Committee
Miss Ethel Houston
Mrs. Lily Khan
Mr. William Morris
Mr. Clifton Robinson (Chairman)
Mr. Gursharan Singh Sarang

Complaints Committee
Mr. Lincoln Crawford
Mr. E. Gilmour Jones
Mrs. Lily Khan
Mr. William Morris (Chairman)
Mr. Clifton Robinson
Mr. Gerald Tyler

Employment Committee
Mr. Alan Gayton (Chairman)
Mr. Kenneth Gill
Professor Bhiku Parekh
Mr. Clifton Robinson
Mr. Gursharan Singh Sarang
Mr. Keith Whitesides

Education, Housing and Services Committee
Mr. Lincoln Crawford
Mrs. Shreela Flather (Chairman)
Dr. Farrukh Hashmi
Professor Bhiku Parekh
Mr. Clifton Robinson
Mr. Gerald Tyler

Individual commissioners may also take responsibility for the conduct of particular formal investigations undertaken by the commission.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish in the Official Report the names of the members of the Welsh consultative committee of the Commission for Racial Equality together with the dates on which they were appointed and the duration of their period on this committee.

Mr. Waddington: I understand that members of the commission's Welsh consultative committee are initially appointed for periods of two years, but that they may then be reappointed at the discretion of the commission. I am informed that the current membership of the committee is as follows:

Name	First appointed
Councillor Mrs. S. Flather (Chairman)	June 1981
Mr. J. Carlile	June 1981
Mr. S. Clarke	June 1981
Dr. H. Cohen	June 1981
Mr. J. Davies	June 1981
Councillor Mrs. J. Lysaght	June 1981
Mr. A. Matthews	Summer 1982
Mr. R. Mooneeran	June 1981
Mr. N. Ramanadan	June 1981
Mr. D. Seligman	June 1981
Mr. V. White MBE	June 1981
*Mr. D. M. Rolph	June 1981
Mr. P. Jones	November 1984
Mr. B. Ashley	April 1984
Insp. C. Francis	November 1984

* Mr. D. M. Rolph represents the Welsh Office.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department in how many instances during the past 12 months he has met community leaders from Wales to discuss the working of the Commission for Racial Equality in Wales.

Mr. Waddington: Neither I nor my right hon. Friend have had such meetings.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the Commission for Racial Equality set up its Welsh consultative committee.

Mr. Waddington: I understand that the Welsh consultative committee of the Commission for Racial Equality first met on 16 June 1981.

Security Co-operation

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether any changes are planned in security co-operation between the police and Ministry of Defence personnel following the discovery of bombs outside Chelsea barracks.

Mr. Hurd: No; there is close and well-established co-operation which is kept under constant review.

Deputy Secretaries (Responsibilities)

Mr. Arnold asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the responsibilities of each of the deputy secretaries in his Department and the numbers and ranks of staff reporting to each.

Mr. Hurd: The information at 1 November 1985 is as follows:

Deputy Secretary:	Criminal, general and statistical departments: and research and planning unit: Three under-secretaries, one chief research officer and 528 other staff
Deputy Secretary:	Police department: Three under-secretaries, controller, forensic science service and 2,645 other staff
Deputy Secretary:	Broadcasting, community programmes and equal opportunities, immigration and nationality, and passport departments: Three under-secretaries and 3,933 other staff
Deputy Secretary:	Establishments, fire and emergency planning, finance and manpower departments: Three under-secretaries, one director of information services and 1,982 other staff
Deputy Secretary:	Legal adviser's branch: Two principal assistant legal advisers and 26 other staff
Deputy Secretary:	Director-general of the prison service: One deputy director-general, three under-secretaries, one director, prison medical services and 27,580 other staff.

Tottenham (Police Action)

Mr. Norman Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will list the numbers according to age, sex and ethnic origin of Tottenham people arrested and taken to the police station; for how long they were held incommunicable; how many have subsequently been charged since Sunday 6 October; and how many remain in custody;

(2) how many house searches have been recorded in the Tottenham and St. Anns police station areas; how many followed the arrest of a household member; how many entrances were made forcibly; how many charges have been made and how many convictions have been recorded since 6 October compared with the average for each of the past 12 months; and if he will set out the information according to ethnic and sex classification;

(3) if he will list the number of stop and search incidents recorded in the Tottenham and St. Anns police station areas of London during each of the past 12 months; how many arrests and convictions have been recorded as a result; and if he will set out the information according to age, ethnic classification and sex.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I shall write to the hon. Member.

Portsmouth and Southampton (Broadcasting Franchise)

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has about representations received by the Independent Broadcasting Authority concerning the broadcasting franchise for the Portsmouth and Southampton area.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I understand that the Independent Broadcasting Authority, which is responsible for the award of contracts under the Broadcasting Act 1981, has received approximately 70 representations about its recent decision on the award of the local radio contract for Portsmouth and Southampton.

Fire Casualties

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the deaths by fire for each year since 1979 where there was evidence that the possibility of escape was prevented by domestic double-glazed windows.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The information requested is not collected centrally on a regular basis. A special exercise over July 1983 to June 1984 revealed no cases where the presence of double-glazing was a material factor in causing fire fatalities. This and the examination of specific cases in England and Wales drawn to our attention suggests that there are very few such incidents.

Prevention of Terrorism

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have been (a) questioned and (b) charged under the Prevention of Terrorism Act for each month since January 1984; and, of those questioned but not charged, what records of the questioning are retained by the police.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Under article 4 of the Prevention of Terrorism (Supplemental Temporary Provisions) Order 1984 there is a power to examine persons arriving in or leaving Great Britain. Such examinations often last for only a few minutes, but article 9 gives authority for the detention of persons pending the conclusion of his examination or pending consideration of the question whether to make an exclusion order against him. There are also powers to arrest and detain under section 12 of the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1984.

The number of people detained under article 9 and section 12, and charged under the Prevention of Terrorism Act 1984 for each month since January 1984, is:

1984	Detained	Charged
January	11	—

Records are not available for persons examined for less than one hour under article 4 of the Prevention of Terrorism (Supplemental Temporary Provisions) Order 1984. Figures for the number of people examined for more than one hour under article 4 are available only since 22 March 1984, when the 1984 Act came into force. They are:

Records of all persons examined for more than one hour under article 4 or detained under article 9 or section 12 of the Prevention of Terrorism Act are kept by the police.

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people questioned under the Prevention of Terrorism Act in Scotland were subsequently transferred to England for further questioning during the past two years.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Nine.

Police (Firearms)

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions in the last year authority has been given for the use of firearms by police in each police authority.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The table shows the number of operations involving criminals or other persons known or believed to be armed in which firearms were issued to the police, and the number of occasions on which they were fired, in 1984.

Police (Establishment)

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for the Home Deaprtment if he will list, for each police authority, the total establishment and the number of post holders for each year since 1979.

Mr. Giles Shaw: On 30 September 1985 the authorised establishment and strength of police forces in England and Wales was as follows. Similar information for 31 December of each year since 1979 is shown in appendix 7 to the annual published reports of Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Constabulary.

Metropolitan Police

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the occasions on which the Metropolitan police armoured cars have been used in the past year.

Mr. Giles Shaw: No, it would not be in the interest of security to do so.

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions over the past 12 months the Metropolitan police air support unit has used Hele-Tele surveillance cameras; what were the occasions and who authorised their use; and on what occasion Hele-Tele was first used operationally by the air support unit.

Mr. Giles Shaw: We understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that over the past 12 months the Hele-Tele surveillance camera was used by his air support unit on about 30 occasions for the following purposes:

(i) to assist security operations at such events as state visits, Trooping the Colour and the moving of high-risk prisoners from prison to court;
(ii) to assist with traffic control at major sporting events such as the Cup Final;
(iii) to assist with the command and control of police officers deployed at demonstrations and marches; and
(iv) to assist in the preparation of training exercises.

The Commissioner assures us that on each occasion the use of the Hele-Tele was fully within the guidelines for the use of equipment in police surveillance operations, a copy of which is in the Library. Authority was given in each case by the commander in charge of the operation.

Hele-Tele was first use at the Notting Hill Gate carnival in 1977.

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the Metropolitan police first acquired stocks of CS gas.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis informs me that the Metropolitan police first acquired CS in the early 1960s, for criminal siege purposes.

Crowd Control Equipment

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list those police authorities which currently hold stocks of (a) CS gas, (b) plastic bullets,

(c) riot shields and (d) water cannon; and if he will indicate any additions to the list which have occurred during the last year.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The following police forces in England and Wales are understood to hold plastic baton rounds and/or CS gas:

Force	Baton rounds	CS gas
Metropolitan police	Yes	Yes
Avon and Somerset	Yes	Yes
Bedfordshire	No	Yes
Cambridgeshire	No	*Yes
Cheshire	No	Yes
City of London	No	Yes
Cleveland	No	*Yes
Derbyshire	No	Yes
Durham	No	*Yes
Essex	Yes	Yes
Gloucestershire	No	*Yes
Greater Manchester	*Yes	Yes
Hampshire	No	Yes
Hertfordshire	No	Yes
Humberside	Yes	Yes
Kent	*Yes	Yes
Lancashire	Yes	Yes
Leicestershire	Yes	Yes
Lincolnshire	No	Yes
Merseyside	Yes	Yes
Norfolk	No	Yes
Northumbria	No	Yes
North Wales	Yes	No
North Yorkshire	Yes	Yes
Nottinghamshire	No	Yes
South Yorkshire	No	Yes
Staffordshire	No	*Yes
Suffolk	No	Yes
Sussex	Yes	Yes
Warwickshire	Yes	Yes
West Mercia	No	Yes
West Midlands	No	Yes
Wiltshire	No	Yes

Notes:

Stocks of CS gas indicated are intended primarily for public order purposes.

* Indicates additions to the list during the last year.

All police forces in England and Wales have stocks of riot shields.

No police force in England and Wales holds operational water cannon, but the Metropolitan police are working with the Home Office in evaluating two prototype water cannon.

Cenotaph (Wreath)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department to whom facilities for laying a wreath at the Cenotaph on Remembrance Sunday currently afforded to the Greater London council, will be granted after 1 April 1986.

Mr. Hurd: No decision has been made about the wreath hitherto laid by the chairman of the Greater London council. I shall inform the hon. Member as soon as a decision has been made.

Drug Trafficking

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he is yet in a position to give details of the Government's proposals for legislation to provide for the confiscation of the proceeds of drug trafficking; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: A statement of the Government's proposals has been placed in the Library and in the Vote Office. It is intended to bring forward legislation shortly to give effect to these proposals. Copies of the statement are also available on request from the Home Office, C4 division, 50 Queen Anne's Gate, London, SW1H 9AT (telephone 01-213 3747).

Handsworth Riots

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects the report of the chief constable of the west midlands on the rioting in the Lozells road area of Handsworth in September to be published.

Mr. Hurd: The chief constable is publishing his report today. I am placing copies in the Library. The report provides a clear account of the disorders and more generally is a most important and valuable contribution to consideration of the lessons to be learnt from the recent disorders in Birmingham and elsewhere.

Animals (Scientific Procedures) Bill

Mr. Maclean asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will make available the draft guidance on the operation of the controls proposed in the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Bill.

Mr. Hurd: Yes. A draft note of guidance on the introduction of new controls on scientific procedures performed on living animals has been prepared. Copies have been placed in the Library and are available in the Vote Office.

Interested organisations have been sent copies of the draft and asked for their comments on it. Copies of subsequent drafts of the note will also be made available to the House in the same way.

Crown Courts (Acquittals)

Mr. Lawrence asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage and how many in number, of defendants who have pleaded not guilty to offences tried in the Crown courts have been acquitted in each of the past five years.

The Solicitor-General: I have been asked to reply.

The percentage and number of defendants dealt with in the Crown court in each of the years 1980 and 1984 who pleaded not guilty to all counts and who were acquitted on all counts is shown in the following table.

Committals for Trial in the Crown Court in England and Wales

	Defendants pleading not guilty to all counts
	Number acquitted on all counts	Percentage acquitted on all counts
1980	14,238	50
1981	14,805	50
1982	14,195	49
1983	14,603	50
1984	14,554	51

Immigration

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people from Bangladesh have (a) been given temporary admission to the United Kingdom and (b) absconded in each month since January 1984.

Mr. Waddington [pursuant to his reply, 13 November 1985, c. 181]: I regret that the information requested in the first part of the question is not available. Information about the number of people from Bangladesh who have absconded and cannot be traced is available only from terminal 3 at Heathrow. It is as follows:

	Number
1985
January-March	16
April-June	5
July-September	30
October	12
Total	63
1984
January-December	7
Total	7

The figures relate to the date on which the individual on temporary admission should have reported to an immigration officer or the police.

A person is not, however, counted as an absconder until efforts over a period of time have failed to trace him, and the figures for recent months are therefore subject to revision as inquiries are completed in further cases. The figures are therefore higher than those given in answer to a question from the right hon. Member for Bethnal Green and Stepney (Mr. Shore) on 29 October.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Afghanistan

Mr. David Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on current relations with Afghanistan.

Mr. Eggar: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply of 11 November 1985 to the hon. Member for Liverpool, Riverside (Mr. Parry). We have no substantive relations with Afghanistan. Following the Soviet invasion in December 1979, we withdrew Her Majesty's ambassador in Kabul and suspended our aid programme to Afghanistan.

Mr. David Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has requested the United States Government at the forthcoming summit meeting between President Reagan and Mr. Gorbachev to raise the continuing Soviet occupation of Afghanistan; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: In President Reagan's speech to the United Nations General Assembly on 24 October he named Afghanistan as one of the five regional conflicts which he intended to raise with Mr. Gorbachev at the Geneva summit talks.

Hong Kong

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many illegal immigrants entered Hong Kong in each of the past six months; and if he will give comparable figures for the previous year.

Mr. Renton: It is not possible to give exact figures. The most reliable indicators are the numbers arrested at the Hong Kong-China border while trying to enter Hong Kong illegally, and the numbers arrested after entry, having evaded the security forces at the border. The figures for the past six months and the comparable figures for the same period last year are:

	Number of border arrests
	1984	1985
May	750	1,033
June	734	1,059
July	602	1,065
August	838	993
September	1,342	1,364
October	1,139	1,935

	Number of evaders arrested
	1984	1985
May	[illegible]	289
June	[illegible]	245
July	214	206
August	253	299
September	275	258
October	261	296

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the Hong Kong Government intend to issue a new identity card; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: The Hong Kong Government intend to issue two new types of identity cards with effect from 1 July 1987. These are "Permanent Hong Kong Identity Cards", which state that a holder has right of abode in Hong Kong, and "Hong Kong Identity Cards", for those who do not have right of abode.

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any plans to grant an amnesty to illegal immigrants now resident in Hong Kong.

Mr. Renton: No. The Hong Kong Government have made it clear that all illegal immigrants arrested either on or after entry into Hong Kong from China will be repatriated.

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the number of persons who have emigrated from Hong Kong in each of the past six years to the latest available date.

Mr. Renton: The number of Hong Kong residents (Hong Kong British passport holders and Hong Kong Certificate of Identity holders) who have emigrated from Hong Kong in each of the past six years and in the first half of this year are:

	Number
1979	12,774
1980	18,602
1981	18,195
1982	21,143
1983	22,209
1984	21,522

* Up to end of June. The corresponding figure for 1984 was 5,947.

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he is satisfied with the current border security between Hong Kong and China; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: Yes. I believe that deployment of the British garrison and the Royal Hong Kong police force at the Hong Kong-China border is adequate to control the influx of would-be illegal immigrants, an increasing proportion of whom are now being arrested at the border rather than in the urban area of Hong Kong.

On 13 November the Hong Kong Government held useful talks in Hong Kong, covering this and other border liaison matters, with the relevant Guangdong provincial authorities of the People's Republic of China.

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the number of illegal immigrants from China in Hong Kong in each of the past six years to the latest available date.

Mr. Renton: Prior to the ending of the "Touch base" policy on 24 October 1980, illegal immigrants from China who had managed to evade capture at the border and to reach the urban area were allowed to remain in Hong Kong. Those whose stay was regularised in this manner totalled 102,826 in 1979 and 61,094 in 1980 (up to 24 October). Since then, all illegal immigrants, both those arrested on entry and those who have evaded the security forces at the border but have been subsequently arrested, have been repatriated to China. The arrest and repatriation figures for the period after the ending of the "Touch base" policy are:

	Border Arrest	Evaders Arrested
1981	7,530	1,690
1982	8,676	2,484
1983	4,671	2,933
1984	9,653	3,090
1985 (January to October)	9,776	2,627

ENVIRONMENT

Rating (Disabled Persons) Act 1978

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if, in the light of the decision of the Court of Appeal in the case of Samaritans of Tyneside v. the Newcastle Upon Tyne City Council on 17 July, he will undertake a review of section 2 subsections 1 and 2 (d) of the Rating (Disabled Persons) Act 1978.

Mrs. Rumbold: There does not appear to be any justification in this Court of Appeal decision for departing from the general principles of the 1978 Act and extending disabled rate relief beyond institutions caring predominantly for the disabled. I understand that the Samaritans of Tyneside already receive the minimum 50 per cent. rating relief on properties used for charitable purposes.

Land Registers

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Mid-Staffordshire dated 9 August on the subject of land registers.

Sir George Young: In my reply of 12 September to my hon. Friend I undertook to let him know the decisions reached in respect of certain parcels of land where my right hon. Friend had given notice of his proposal to direct the disposal of the land. I am now able to do so.

On 25 June 1985, notices were given under section 99 of the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980 to the owners of 50 land register sites giving them notice of the Secretary of State's proposals to direct them to take steps to dispose of their land. The owners had 42 days to make representations as to why they should not be so directed or as to the proposed contents of the directions. The 42-day period ended on 6 August 1985. Representations were received from owners of all 50 sites.

After carefully considering the representations made to him, my right hon. Friend has today made directions under section 98 of the 1980 Act requiring the owners of 21 of the original 50 sites to take steps to dispose of their interest in the land. A list of the 21 sites, which amount to about 56·3 hectares of land, has been placed in the Library of the house.

In the case of a further 21 sites, totalling some 85 hectares, he has decided not to make directions at the moment because he is satisfied that the owners have either disposed of the site, brought it back into use or are about to do so, in many cases as a result of the section 99 notice. In the cases of the remaining eight sites, totalling some 15·7 hectares, he has decided not to direct the disposal of the land in accordance with the original proposed directions but is considering fresh directions. He has today given notice under section 99 of the 1980 Act of his revised proposed directions in respect of three of these totalling 12·5 hectares. These sites are at Wythenshawe road in Manchester, Newmarket road, Ashton-under-Lyne and Hawthorne road, Denton.

The present exercise has proved successful. Of the 157 hectares subject to the 50 section 99 notices, 54 per cent. has already been or is being sold or brought into use; 36 per cent. is now the subject of directions under section 98 of the act; and my right hon. Friend is today giving notice of his intention to direct disposal of almost all the remainder.

In those cases where my right hon. Friend has decided not to make a direction for the moment, my Department will monitor progress and take action as appropriate. We are determined to maintain the momentum we have built up in bringing surplus land back into use and will be considering similar action on other sites, shortly.

English Industrial Estates

Mr. Stephen Ross asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the current programme of development at present being undertaken by English Industrial Estates on the Isle of Wight will be completed in full.

Mrs. Rumbold: Yes. The programme concerned is funded by the Development Commission and is being pushed forward vigorously.

Dog Licensing

Mr. Patrick McNair-Wilson asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the future of dog licences.

Mrs. Rumbold: This matter remains under consideration following consultation on possible changes to the licensing system. We will announce our conclusions as soon as possible.

Housing Investment Programme

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he proposes to announce the 1985-86 housing investment programme allocations.

Sir George Young: The housing investment programme allocations for 1985-86 were announced on 20 December 1984. My right hon. Friend will make an announcement very shortly about the total available for allocations in 1986-87, and intends to notify individual local authorities of their allocations in December.

Defective Housing

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's policy on the allocation to local authorities of resources for the repair of defective properties in the light of the decision of the Divisional Court on 23 July in the case of Birmingham district council v. Wendy Kelly, Beryl Robinson and Travella Edmonds concerning health risks in council properties which have condensation.

Sir George Young: We are discussing with the local authority associations how best to distribute the resources available for allocation to local authorities for capital expenditure on housing in 1986-87. The allocations themselves, together with the principles followed in making them, will be announced in due course: they will take proper account of all relevant considerations.

Housing Expenditure

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how much of the extra cash allocated to housing in 1986-87 following the autumn statement will be available, taking inflation into account, to increase the actual numbers of dwellings in serious disrepair which can be worked upon, compared with 1985-86.

Sir George Young: I shall be announcing very shortly the apportionment of the total public expenditure provision for housing in 1986-87 between local authorities, new towns and the Housing Corporation. It is [illegible] local authorities to determine how best to spend the resources available to them, but I expect greater priority to be given to renovation of local authority dwellings next year, in the light of the report of the Department's inquiry into the condition of local authority housing stock.

Housing Repairs (London)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if his Department has any plans to help local authorities deal with repairs to housing stock transferred from the Greater London council; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: On abolition, the housing capital allocation which would have been given to the GLC for renovating transferred stock in 1986-87 will be distributed to transferee authorities according to need. Housing capital receipts accruing to the London Residuary Body will be distributed to the boroughs pro rata to HIP allocations. The boroughs will be able to secure the services of GLC specialist staff, using, if they wish, the good offices of the London Residuary Body.

Docklands Light Railway

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what existing developments will be displaced in relation to the construction of the Docklands light railway; and with what employment consequences.

Sir George Young: I shall answer this question shortly.

Greater London Council (Abolition)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the responses received in support of his Department's proposals for future arrangements for the Greater London council's seaside and country homes.

Sir George Young: Thirty-seven district councils, three London boroughs and the ADC have responded in support of the Department's proposals.

Hammersmith Community Trust

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to give his decision on a section 93 grant to the Hammersmith Community Trust to carry out repairs to premises at 153 Hammond road and for the removal of asbestos, for which the Greater London council applied on 24th June.

Sir George Young: My right hon. Friend has received no application for consent from the Greater London council to the carrying out of work at 153 Hammond road by the Hammersmith Community Trust or by any other party.

Voluntary Organisations

Mr. Maples asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what assistance he will be able to give local authorities towards the funding of voluntary organisations affected by abolition; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: In order to stimulate local authority funding of voluntary bodies, the Government are making transitional grant available on £20 million a year worth of voluntary projects taken on by boroughs and districts from the GLC/MCCs.

There has been an encouraging response from local authorities, which justifies the Government's confidence that its measures to safeguard voluntary bodies after abolition will be effective. Provisional bids have been made by all but one of the authorities concerned. This demonstrates their willingness to take on these increased responsibilities, aided by the substantial support which the transitional grant scheme will provide.

We are writing today to the authorities in response to the initial bids setting out in more detail how the allocations of transitional grant will be made. We wish to direct the grants towards those local projects which make the most effective contribution towards tackling the social needs of the areas concerned. Political campaigning groups, police monitoring groups, and groups which do not benefit local people will not get support.

I am placing a copy of the letter in the Library.

Double Glazing (Fire Safety)

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what advice his Department issues concerning safety in domestic properties in the case of fire where double glazing is involved.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I have been asked to reply.

Home Office fire safety publicity includes general advice on the need to plan escape routes in case of fire in the home. Specific advice on the possible use of windows as a means of escape is contained in material issued by the glazing trade and this subject has also been publicised by other organisations.

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from safety organisations concerning the dangers arising from fire in double-glazed properties.

Sir George Young: During the consultations over the new building regulations, representations were received from the Royal Society for the Prevention of Accidents that the regulations should require double-glazed windows to be openable to provide a means of escape in the event of fire.

In 1983 Government Departments carried out a review of policies on glazing and fire safety. Little evidence emerged then, or has done since the Home Office followed up the review in 1984, that fixed glazing is a significant factor in causing or contributing to fatal casualties. In the light of the review, the Government decided that an extension of the building regulations would not be justified.

However, the Government attach a high priority to fire safety in the home and we regularly review the requirements of the building regulations to ensure that essential fire safety standards are maintained.

Thames Water Authority

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if, in the light of the London and Metropolitan Government Staff Commission's circular No. 9 issued on 11 October, he will issue a direction to the Thames water authority further to consider designating staff of the Greater London council working in areas for which the Thames water authority will become responsible; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: No.

Leeds and Liverpool Canal Corridor

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to reach a decision on the joint application to his Department for a submission for grant aid under the European regional development fund for a study into the social and economic feasibility of a scheme to revitalise the Leeds and Liverpool canal corridor.

Mr. Tracey: The application for European regional development fund grant aid was received in my Department on 11 November. Internal consultations are already under way and officials expect to be in a position to discuss the proposals with Lancashire county council shortly.

Local Government Reform (Retirement Arrangements)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the responses received to his Department's proposals in the consultation paper arising from the Local Government Act 1985, regarding early retirement arrangements for staff of the Greater London council and metropolitan county councils.

Mr. Tracey: My Department received responses from the TUC, the London and Metropolitan Government Staff Commission, the AMA, the ACC, the ADC, and some 19 individual local authorities. A variety of responses were also received from other interested organisations and individuals.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Dentists

Mr. Weetch asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the figures for the amounts scheduled per dentist in the General Dental Services of the National Health Service for the months April to September 1985 inclusive; and what are the comparable figures for the equivalent months from 1981 to 1984 inclusive.

Mr. Hayhoe: The information requested is not available on a monthly basis. The average amounts scheduled per dentist* in England and Wales for the quarters April to June and June to September in each of the years 1981 to 1985 are as follows:

	April to June £	July to September £
1981	9,527	8,998
1982	10,643	9,968
1983	10,714	10,537
1984	11,328	11,227
1985	11,556	11,941

* Excluding dentists who did not work in the GDS for the whole year (ending in September), and a small number in other groups.

Opticians

Mr. Weetch asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) in the light of the recent judgment in the High Court concerning the clawback of alleged excess profits by opticians, whether he will consider withdrawing the clawback of a similar nature imposed on dentists;

(2) what are the figures for the amounts of money withheld from dentists, under the clawback arrangements, during the following years: 1979-80, 1980-81, 1981-82, 1982-83, 1983-84 and 1984-85; and whether he will express these figures both as total amounts and amounts per individual general dental practitioner.

Mr. Hayhoe: No adjustments of the kind imposed on opticians have been imposed on dentists. The system of remuneration of general dental practitioners includes an arrangement whereby the income paid in one year is adjusted in agreement with the profession, on the basis of data on actual income supplied by the Inland Revenue, to take account of any under or over payments in previous years. This arrangement has proved acceptable to the independent Doctors and Dentists Review Body.

The adjustments made in the years 1979-80 to 1984-85 and agreed by the profession are as follows (a negative sign indicating an amount recovered from dentists).

	Total (England) £ million	*Amount per general dental practitioner
1981-82	−5·4	−440
1982-83	−2·5	−197

* excluding dentists who did not work in the GDS for the whole year and a small number in other groups.

Invalidity Benefit

Mr. Clay asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what will be the total cost of (a) paying a 7 per cent. increase in invalidity benefit to all invalidity pensioners and (b) paying a 7 per cent. increase to all other social security beneficiaries, broken down by category.

Mr. Major: I assume that the hon. Member is referring to the cost of this month's uprating, when the great majority of benefits will increase by 7 per cent. Invalidity benefit will, however, increase by 11·8 per cent. because of the restoration of the 5 per cent. abatement introduced in 1980.

The total net cost of this uprating of invalidity benefit is about £170 million in a full year. The figure takes account of the restoration of the abatement, the introduction by the Social Security Act 1985 of an offset between invalidity allowance and the additional component, and the effect on supplementary benefit entitlement.

The full year net costs of uprating other main benefits are:

Benefit	Cost £ million
Retirement pension	1,120
Widows' benefits	55
Unemployment benefit	115
Sickness benefit	20
Invalid care allowance	1
Attendance allowance	45
Severe disablement allowance	20
Mobility allowance	30
Industrial injuries benefits	30
War pensions	35
Maternity allowance	15
Child benefit*	100
One parent benefit	10
Family income supplement*	35
Supplementary benefits*	230
Housing benefit*	—

Notes:
1. All figures are rounded
2. Benefits marked * increase by an amount different from seven per cent.
3. The cost of increasing supplementary benefit and housing benefit is reduced by the relatively higher uprating of other benefits.

The total cost of the uprating is about £2,050 million.

Health Visitors

Mr. Galley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what national provisions exist for providing standardised information on a continuing basis to health visitors throughout the United Kingdom to ensure a consistent approach between health authorities and to disseminate models of good practice.

Mr. Hayhoe: A package of performance indicators has been sent to health authorities to help local management identify aspects of service performance which warrant investigation and to offer them pointers to appropriate action for improving services. Indicators particularly relevant to health visitors are:

—numbers of children seen in a year —vaccination and immunisation rates
—number of health visitors visits per 1,000 population
—number of over 65s seen by health visitors

This material is published annually and was last circulated to health authorities in July 1985.

Severe Weather Payments

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he intends to issue any guidance during the current winter on the interpretation of regulation 26 of the supplementary benefit regulations governing single payments due to exceptionally severe weather; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Andrew Bowden asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will take steps to increase the effectiveness and fairness of the operation of the supplementary benefit single payment for exceptionally severe weather, particularly so far as claims by eligible elderly people in the coming winter are concerned.

Mr. Newton: I refer the hon. Member and my hon. Friend to my reply to the hon. Member for Dunfermline, East (Mr. Brown) on 11 November at columns 95-96.

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the total numbers of people who claimed cold weather payments in 1979, 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983, 1984 and 1985 to date.

Mr. Newton: Information is not available on the total numbers of people who have claimed supplementary benefit single payments for extra fuel used as a result of periods of exceptionally severe weather. The number of payments made in recent years is as follows:

Year	Approximate number of payments (thousands)
1981	—
1982	280
1983	—
1984	—
1985 (to date)	170

Figures are not available for 1979 or 1980.

NHS (Expenditure)

Mr. Pendry asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how much of health service expenditure as an absolute figure and as a percentage of total National Health Service expenditure for each of the past 10 years was spent on (a) elderly and geriatric services, (b) community services, (c) the mentally handicapped, (d) the mentally ill, (e) obstetric services and (f) acute hospital services.

Mr. Hayhoe: The requested breakdown by patient group is available only for hospital and community health services expenditure which accounts for some 70 per cent. of total National Health Service expenditure. The table shows estimated gross current expenditure by health authorities, in cash and as a percentage of total hospital and community health services expenditure, on the main client groups each year between 1975-76 and 1983-84, the latest year for which these estimates are available. Comparable figures prior to 1975-76 are not available.

These estimates of health authorities' spending are valid for monitoring broad trends, but not for making close comparisons between individual programmes. They are derived from the Department's programme budget analyses which have been provided to the Social Services Committee each year since 1980 and have been published in minutes of evidence associated with the Committee's reports. The latest analysis at constant prices, together with notes of caution on the limits of its accuracy, are given in the Committee's Sixth Report (HC 339) which was published in June of this year.

‖ Provisional.

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what consideration he has given to the joint policy statement on National Health Service expenditure sent to him by the British Medical Association, the Institute of Health Service Administrators and the Royal College of Nursing; what response he is making; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: I shall let the right hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Computer Files

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Social Services which personal data files on (a) the unemployment benefit computer system at Reading and (b) his Department's computer system at Newcastle have reference to or are indexes to manual files; and whether he will describe the broad categories or details that can be found on those manual files.

Mr. Major: The unemployment benefit computer systems at Reading and Livingstone and the computer systems in Newcastle central office both have reference to supporting clerically held records containing, for example, evidence of entitlement to benefit. Where taxable benefits are concerned there may also be references to income tax records held by the Inland Revenue, some of which are clerical. The pensions, national insurance contributions and child benefit systems in Newcastle central office include references which could lead to other files held in DHSS central offices and local offices relating to entitlement to various social security benefits. Some personal data files in these systems may also include references to files held outside the Department, such as bank or building society accounts or occupational pensions schemes, but the details contained in those files are not available to the Department.

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Stephen Ross asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to amend the rule relating to those employed on seasonal work who are currently barred from drawing unemployment benefit after three consecutive years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: A seasonal worker may receive unemployment benefit during his off-season if he can show that he has had, or can reasonably expect to obtain, a substantial amount of employment during that off-season. This condition is designed to ensure that unemployment benefit is not paid to those seasonal workers who are not in the employment field during their off-seasons. As there is no practical way of distinguishing between the voluntary and involuntary seasonal worker, we have no plans to amend these rules.

Operation Seagull

Mr. Terry Lewis asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what was the total number of non-premium time hours worked by, and the total cost of overtime payments to, North-western regional health authority ambulance personnel at, or travelling to and from Blackpool, during the period 7 to 11 October;

(2) what was the total cost to the North-western regional health authority of Operation Seagull, mounted at Blackpool during the period 7 to 11 October;

(3) how many vehicles belonging to A, B and C divisions, respectively, of the North-western regional health authority ambulance service were on deployment and based at Blackpool from 7 to 11 October; how many ambulances remained on station at Salford, Atherton, Wigan and Bolton during that period; how many ambulance service support vehicles were sent to Blackpool on a daily basis during that period; and what were the total numbers of hours paid, hours worked and rest days worked by ambulance personnel from the Greater Manchester ambulance service engaged in Operation Seagull during that period.

Mr. Whitney: We do not hold this information centrally. I understand the hon. Member may already have had answers to some of these questions from the chairman of the North Western regional health authority, who may also be able to answer the remaining points.

Hospital Beds (Grimsby)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the figures for the number of hospital beds in Great Grimsby at the latest available date and for May 1979.

Mr. Whitney: Information is not available centrally in precisely the form requested. During 1984, the latest year for which figures are available centrally, the average daily number of available beds in National Health Service hospitals in Grimsby District Health Authority was 800. The corresponding figure for 1979 was 797.

Hypothermia (Grimsby)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many deaths from hypothermia there have been in the last five years in Great Grimsby.

Mr. Whitney: There have been two deaths registered between 1 January 1981 and 1 November 1985 with a mention of hypothermia on the death certificate to residents of Great Grimsby, one female in 1982 and one male in 1983.

Woolwich Office

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what computer facilities are available at his Department's Woolwich office.

Mr. Major: In accordance with the Department's operational strategy seven British Telecom microcomputer systems have been installed to deal with supplementary benefit work and will be in operation shortly. Datalink equipment allowing national insurance information to be obtained has been in use for several years.

Child Benefit

Mr. Squire asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the cost of each 1 per cent. increase in child benefit.

Mr. Newton: The net cost of a 1 per cent. increase in child benefit would be about £35 million in a full year.

Family Income Supplement

Mr. Squire asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many extra families he expects will receive family income supplement as a result of the changes to the scheme, over and above indexation, that will be implemented this November.

Mr. Newton: About 10,000.

Regional Health Authorities (Court Settlements)

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the number of out of court settlements, and the amounts paid, by each regional health authority for claims against each authority in each of the last four financial years for which figures are available.

Mr. Hayhoe: The information held centrally does not distinguish between out of court settlements and those resulting from court decisions. The table shows the number of cases in which compensation payments were made by the health authorities in each region as a result of court decisions, legal advice or out of court settlements, and the total of the payments, as recorded in authorities' annual accounts.

McColl Report

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when the report of the McColl working party on artificial limbs and appliances is expected to be published.

Mr. Newton: I refer the right hon. Member to my reply to the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe (Mr. Morris) and the hon. Member for Eccles (Mr. Carter-Jones) on 13 November at columns 207-8.

Salmonella Deaths (Wakefield)

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to receive the report of the inquiry into the salmonella deaths at Stanley Royd hospital, Wakefield.

Mr. Hayhoe: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Pontefract and Castleford (Mr. Lofthouse) on 11 November at columns 95-6.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, on the latest available figures, if he will provide the waiting lists for (a) urgent and (b) non-urgent cases in (i) Leeds eastern district health authority and (ii) Leeds western district health authority; and if he will give the comparable figures for 1984.

Mr. Whitney: The requested information is given in the table.

Number of cases on in-patient waiting lists for admission to NHS hospitals at 31 March

District Health Authority	Urgent cases		Non-urgent cases
	1984	1985	1984	1985

Leeds Western	450	667	3,971	3,665

Mrs. Myra Mable Fairclough

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will take steps to ensure that the Portsmouth and South East Hampshire health authority's report and inquiry into the death of Mrs. Myra Mable Fairclough at St. Mary's hospital, Portsmouth, is made public.

Mr. Hayhoe: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him on 12 November at columns 161-62.

Surgical Operations (Resources)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what resources he proposes to allocate during the next three years towards increasing hip replacement operations, renal services and coronary artery surgery facilities; and what is the current level of demand from senior citizens for each of the above treatments.

Mr. Hayhoe: Spending in the hospital and community health services is planned to increase by £650 million in 1986-87. Further increases of £470 million and £440 million are planned for 1987-88 and 1988-89 respectively. Health authorities will also have available their growing cost improvement programmes. It is for authorities to decide upon the allocation of resources to individual services from within the totals available to them. But, the three procedures listed are identified as key priorities for further development and I expect authorities to plan accordingly. Information on the levels of demand for specific procedures or by age group is not available centrally.

Ambulancemen

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the average weekly earnings of ambulancemen each year since 1979; and how many ambulancemen employed in the west midlands region have enrolled for the 12-month life-saving techniques courses arranged by the Government.

Mr. Whitney: Estimates, derived from various sources for each year except 1982, of average gross weekly earnings (excluding London allowance) of all ambulancemen are as follows:

June 1979	93.92
June 1980	129.95
June 1981	141.56
June 1983	153.55
June 1984	160.46
June 1985	*162.08

* Excluding the 1985-86 settlement which is still the subject of negotiations.

The courses are not arranged by the Government and the information relating to the west midlands region is not held centrally. The hon. Member may wish to write to the chairman of the west midlands regional health authority who may be able to provide the information requested.

Food Additives

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the policy on the alleged health risks associated with diethylene glycol in sweets, meat pies, pasties, sausage rolls, cakes and puddings.

Mr. Whitney: I am advised that it is unlikely that adverse health effects have occurred as a result of exposure to diethylene glycol (DEG) and monoethylene glycol (MEG) in food, arising from the use over many years of regenerated cellulose film (RCF), though the possibility that untoward effects might have occurred in some individuals cannot be ruled out. I am satisfied that there is no need at the present time to take action to remove from retail sale food wrapped in RCF. However, it is necessary for steps to be taken to reduce levels of DEG and MEG migrating into food, and in his reply to the hon. Member on 21 November, my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food will indicate the action being taken. We shall continue to keep in close touch on this matter.

Hospital and Community Health Services

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the real terms increase in revenue expenditure on hospital and community health services since 1982; what percentage of that increase has been used to meet the costs of the National Health Service drugs bill, the financing of pay awards and costs of repairs and maintenance; to what extent the increase takes into account demographic changes; and what investments he proposes to inject into the hospital and community health budget during the next three years.

Mr. Hayhoe: Revenue expenditure on hospital and community health services increased 2·4 per cent. in economic cost terms in the two years from 1982-83 to 1984-85. The cash allocations for each year included an amount over and above forecast general inflation in recognition of the costs of demographic change. Health authorities are expected to meet pay and price increases, to develop services and to invest as necessary in repairs and maintenance from within the total resources available to them, including both their cash allocations and resources released from efficiency savings and cost improvement programmes. It is not, therefore, possible to identify separately the proportion of the cash interest allocated each year which has been spent on specific items. As regards hospital and community health services funding over the next three years, I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services to my hon. Friend the Member for Surrey, South-West (Mrs. Bottomley) on 12 November at columns 162-63.

Social Fund

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what guidelines he intends to issue in respect of availability of assistance with furniture, house repairs, fuel disconnection and reconnection charges, costs caused by sickness or visits to a child in care and home insulation within the framework of the social fund.

Mr. Newton: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Derby, South (Mrs. Beckett) on 3 July at columns 177-78.

Mental Patients

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many patients have been detained under the Mental Health Act 1983; how many complaints were submitted to the Mental Health Act Commission about treatment of mental patients; and what findings arose from those complaints which were subsequently investigated.

Mr. Whitney: Information is not available in the precise form requested. Numbers of compulsory admissions are collected centrally by calendar year. In the course of the year 1984, there were a total of 16,019 compulsory admissions to mental illness and mental handicap hospitals and units in England under the terms of the Mental Health Act 1983, and on 31 December 1984, 5,892 patients were detained under the Act. The yearly figure of 16,019 includes some patients admitted more than once.

The Mental Health Act 1983 came into effect on 30 September 1983. Information about compulsory admissions between that date and the end of 1983 is not readily available but I will let the hon. Member have it as soon as it is available.

On the question of complaints made to the Mental Health Act Commission, I refer the hon. Member to section 10 and appendix 2 of the commission's first biennial report (House of Commons paper 586) which was laid before the House on 22 October 1985.

Finsbury Park and Archway (Claimants)

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the numbers of claimants at the Finsbury Park and Archway offices of his Department in receipt of (a) supplementary benefit and (b) single payments for furniture in September of each year since 1979.

Mr. Major: The table shows the number of claimants receiving supplementary benefit from the Department's offices at Finsbury Park and Archway on 30 July 1985 —the latest available figures—and at comparative dates in each of the preceding five years. Figures for 1979 are not now available.

	Finsbury Park	Archway (Highgate)
1980	10,143	11,775
1981	12,859	13,981
1982	15,215	16,679
1983	15,929	16,276
1984	17,507	17,072
1985	18,023	18,332

Source 100 per cent. count of cases in action.

Information is not available from which reliable estimates could be made of the number of single payments made for furniture by individual offices for any period. Statistics are collected monthly on the total number of all single payments made by each office and although later information for these offices is available, for comparison purposes details of awards of all single payments for the 4 week period ending 30 July 1985 and of the same periods in the preceding five years are given as follows:

	Finsbury Park	Archway (Highgate)
1980	245	242
1981	175	178
1982	224	167
1983	342	236
1984	324	348
1985	723	481

Figures for 1979 are not now available.

Note: Since April 1984 the basis of counting single payment awards has changed. Now unsuccessful claims and separate payments made simultaneously to the same beneficiary but under different single payment regulations are also included.

Free Prescribing

Mr. Walters asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the estimated cost of free prescribing for patients suffering from specified medical conditions which call for continuous life-long medication.

Mr. Hayhoe: I regret that the information is not available in the form requested.

Mr. Walters asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will take steps to include Dariers disease, multiple sclerosis and cystic fibrosis on the list of life-long illnesses which are eligible for free medication.

Mr. Hayhoe: I have no plans at present to do so.

Mr. Walters asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has made any estimate of the cost of extending exemption from prescription charges to sufferers of Dariers disease; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: No, but, since I understand the number of people suffering from this rare, hereditary disease is small, the cost would not be great. However, there are many other groups of people who believe that they should be exempt from prescription charges and any extension of the present arrangements to all these groups would be costly.

Prepayment Certificates

Mr. Walters asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will take steps to reduce the cost of prepayment certificates for those people suffering from life-long illnesses not included on the exemption list.

Mr. Hayhoe: No, I have no plans to do so.

Doctors, Nurses and Midwives

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what were the numbers of doctors, nurses and midwives in Hampshire for each of the years from 1979 to the present.

Mr. Hayhoe: Reliable, consistent data are not available in the form requested for hospital staff. These figures are recorded by health authority areas, whose boundaries are not in this instance wholly contiguous with those of the local authority.

The figures for general medical practitioners are as follows:

Number of Unrestricted Principals in Hampshire Family Practitioner Committee

	Number
1979	678
1980	694
1981	726
1982	747
1983	763
1984	786

Anglers (Cancer)

Mr. Mason asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if the committee on carcinogenicity at its meeting on 29 October considered the relationship between the use of chrysoidine dye and bladder cancer in anglers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: Yes. The committee on carcinogenicity considered the report of a study on chrysoidine dye and urothelial cancer published in The Lancet on 29 June together with further information provided by the authors.

The committee confirmed that the study demonstrated an association between coarse fishing and urothelial cancer, but the association was with coarse fishing overall rather than with any specific factor connected with coarse fishing, and the explanation for the association was not clear. A serious problem with interpreting the study arose from the lack of data on the quantity of tobacco smoked by patients in the study. Since cigarette smoking is known to be a risk-factor for bladder cancer it is possible that the increased risk for urothelial cancer noted in anglers and in certain subgroups of anglers may be a result of greater tobacco usage in these groups rather than due to the use of dyes. It was also noted that the increase in risk was relatively small, and only just reached the level of statistical significance.

The committee reaffirmed its advice that it would be prudent for anglers who wanted to use chrysoidine to avoid contact through the skin (eg by using suitable protective gloves) or mouth with this dye, either when preparing dyed maggots or when using such maggots to bait hooks.

Regional Health Authorities

Mr. William Powell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he will be making new appointments to regional health authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: The term of office of half the current members of regional health authorities ends on 30 September 1986, and in accordance with the National Health Service Act 1977 we are seeking nominations for new members. If hon. Members wish to recommend any individuals for membership I invite them to write to me by 19 December 1985. Re-appointments and changes will be announced in due course.

Hospitals (Wartime Measures)

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information is given to his Department's civil defence planners about the consequences for managing hospitals in times of war of the requirements of the joint United Kingdom/United States logistic plan for hospitals to give priority to United States military casualties.

Mr. Whitney [pursuant to his reply, 11 November 1985, c. 96]: Existing guidance on the management of hospitals in time of war is contained in Home Defence circular 77/1. This does not include reference to the United States/United Kingdom lines of communication arrangement.

It is hoped to promulgate new guidance soon and NHS planners are amongst those recently consulted on a revised draft.

The United States/United Kingdom lines of communication arrangement does not require priority to be given to US military casualties. The priority given to all casualties will be based on medical opinion at the time.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many hospitals will be required to discharge their patients in order to receive United States military casualties if the current United States/United Kingdom lines of communication agreement is implemented in wartime.

Mr. Whitney [pursuant to his reply, 11 November 1985, c. 96]: In a period of transition to war health authorities, if so directed, will be required to curtail admission of all but emergency cases and will arrange for patients whose retention is not medically essential to be sent home. The purpose of this will be to free hospitals to deal with civilian and military casualties. The latter may include US Service personnel.

Crown Immunity

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his estimate of the additional cost likely to be incurred by the National Health Service if Crown immunity were abolished.

Mr. Hayhoe [pursuant to his reply, 18 November 1985]: No estimate has been made and I regret that detailed information on which to base an estimate is not available.

Thames Regional Health Authorities (Treatment Facilities)

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what facilities have been developed in the four Thames regions to treat the following groups of patients; drug misusers, the elderly, those suffering from mental illness and the mentally handicapped since 1979.

Mr. Whitney [pursuant to his reply, 18 November 1985]: This information is not held centrally, since the development of local facilities for the client groups to which my hon. Friend refers are a matter for the four regional health authorities and 58 district health authorities concerned. My hon. Friend may, therefore, find it helpful to contact the regional chairmen about the current position. In relation to services for drug misusers, our report "Drug Misuse: Prevalence and Service Provision" a copy of which is held in the Library, may also prove a useful source.

Water

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans he has to issue advice to health authorities on the effects of acidification of waters on the aluminium content of potable supplies.

Mr. Whitney [pursuant to his reply, 18 November 1985]: No advice is necessary because the concentrations of aluminium in potable water are not known to present a public health problem. It is understood that water undertakers monitor the aluminium content of water.

Liver Transplants

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people died because of liver failure in the last year for which figures are available; and if he will estimate the proportion who could have been saved had suitable liver and transplant facilities been available.

Mr. Whitney [pursuant to his reply, 13 November 1985, c. 202-4]: It is not possible to estimate with any degree of accuracy how many people die because of liver failure each year. A working party at the Royal College of Surgeons has provisionally estimated the need for liver transplantation in England at 120 operations annually, but it will be revising this figure in about a year's time.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what change there has been in the resources devoted to liver transplant work in the National Health Service over the last two years for which figures are available.

Mr. Whitney [pursuant to his reply 13 November 1985 c. 202-4]: It is estimated that £1,452,000 was spent on liver transplantations in 1984-85. The funds allocated under the supra regional arrangements for 1985-86 total £2,336,000 and should enable about 95 operations to be performed. Both numbers are at 1985-86 cost levels.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people are on the waiting list for liver transplants.

Mr. Whitney [pursuant to his reply, 13 November 1985, c. 202-4]: Waiting lists for liver transplants are maintained by the hospitals concerned and information is not collected centrally.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will take steps to encourage general practitioners to refer patients with serious liver complaints to transplant centres.

Mr. Whitney [pursuant to his reply, 13 November 1985, c. 202-4]: No. The referral of patients is a matter for the doctors concerned. I am, however, informed that a surgeon would be most unlikely to accept for liver transplantation a patient who had not been seen by a consultant hepatologist.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many liver transplant operations were carried out in (a) National Health Service hospitals and (b) private hospitals in each of the last three years for which figures are available.

Mr. Whitney [pursuant to his reply, 13 November 1985, c. 202-4]: National figures for liver transplant operations were not collected before 1983. Twenty such operations were performed in National Health Service hospitals in 1983 and 49 in 1984. Information on operations performed in private hospitals is not collected centrally, but it is not thought that any were performed before 1 April 1985.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will detail the factors that limit the expansion of liver transplant facilities in the National Health Service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney [pursuant to his reply, 13 November 1985, c. 202-4]: Liver transplantation is an increasingly successful procedure, but even though the cost of each operation appears to be falling as the number of operations performed increases, it is still very expensive and additional funds for expansion can only be found at the expense of other aspects of health service provision. There is at present no indication that suitable donor livers for adult patients are in short supply, though finding suitable donor livers for paediatric patients can be a problem in some cases. Liver transplantation was designated as a supra regional service from 1 April 1984, and my right hon. Friend's intention is that the funds allocated under the supra regional arrangements should be increased as the availability of resources allows; he will be receiving advice on how this might best be managed from the supra regional services advisory group.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Drunkenness

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the outcome of experimental schemes designed to divert drunkenness offenders from the courts; what further plans he has for such schemes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: Successive Governments have sought ways of relieving the criminal justice system of the burden of dealing with drunkenness offenders, and doing so in ways which might lead to rehabilitation rather than punishment. The most promising options in the last decade, detoxification centres and wet shelters, have both received Government support on an experimental basis. An evaluation published earlier this year of two detoxification centres set up in 1976 with the help of a DHSS grant suggested that, in practice, admissions involved fewer homeless habitual drunks than had been expected and few of those admitted needed or would respond to the sophisticated services provided. DHSS funding was withdrawn at the end of the experimental period, and the Home Office grant to the Leeds detoxification centre will not continue beyond the end of the current financial year.

In 1981 an experimental overnight shelter was set up in Birmingham with financial support from the Home Office with the aim of providing a simple sobering-up service for drunkenness offenders outside the criminal justice system. Evaluation of this project showed that, while it had had some success in reducing prosecutions for drunkenness, it was usually under-occupied and had had little success in referring its clients to other agencies for longer term help. Any financial savings to the police and the courts have been difficult to identify separately. Costs have been higher than had been expected, in part because of under-use. The Government doubt whether overnight shelters are likely to prove a cost-effective means of dealing with drunkenness offenders outside the criminal justice system. Government funding was made available to enable the experiment to go ahead and will cease at the end of the current financial year.

The Government remain committed to the policy of diverting drunkenness offenders from the criminal justice system. They are encouraged by the development of police cautioning schemes under which offenders are arrested, kept in police cells until they have sobered up and then cautioned, rather than prosecuted. It is, of course, for chief officers of police to decide whether they wish to adopt such cautioning schemes, but the Government take the view that they have considerable potential for diverting drunkenness offenders from the courts.

Outside the criminal justice system, the Government will continue to provide a range of advice, treatment and rehabilitation services for those with drinking problems, either directly or in conjunction with grant-aided voluntary organisations. The emphasis in future is expected to be on community based services involving statutory and voluntary bodies, for all problem drinkers, and the health and social needs of drunkenness offenders should be seen in this context.

BBC (Security Vetting)

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is Her Majesty's Government's policy on the vetting of British Broadcasting Corporation staff by the security services.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Government believe (as have successive Governments over a long period) that it is in the national interest for the BBC to apply certain necessary security procedures. The Government welcome the review of these procedures recently undertaken by the director general of the BBC, which has led to a clarification of the criteria for their application and ensured that the number of posts affected by them is kept to the necessary minimum. As the BBC has made clear, it alone decides whom to appoint to any post within the corporation, and no external agency has a right of veto on the appointment or promotion of any member of staff.

Bailiff (Powers of Arrest)

Mr. Onslow asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidance he has given to water authorities as to the implications of the provisions of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act for the powers of arrest of bailiffs employed by water authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Home Office has responded to individual requests for information on the implications of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 for the powers of arrest of bailiffs employed by water authorities. Section 26 of th 1984 Act repeals (subject to certain specified exceptions) all existing statutory powers of arrest without warrant of constables, but it will not affect the power of water bailiffs to arrest under section 34 of the Salmon and Freshwater Fisheries Act 1975. Additionally, in the general enforcement of the 1975 Act, water bailiffs will be able to exercise the general arrest powers of a constable contained in section 25 of the 1984 Act, where any of the arrest criteria set out in that section are satisfied.

Section 67(9) of the 1984 Act requires persons charged with the duty of investigating offences to have regard to any relevant provisions of the codes of practice which we may issue under section 66. It will be a matter for such persons to decide in their own particular circumstances the extent to which the provisions of such codes may be applicable to the execution of their duties.

Immigration Officers

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from unions representing immigration officers about the organisation and management of their work.

Mr. Waddington: I have received representations personally from the national executive committee of the Immigration Service Union. It expressed concern at the increase in operational pressures which have been experienced during recent months, particularly at Heathrow; the increase in the number of cases attracting representations from right hon. and hon. Members: and the adequacy of staffing levels. Officials of the Home Office have also had meetings with representatives both of the Immigration Service Union and of the immigration branch of the Society of Civil and Public Servants, which also represents some immigration officers. The organisation and management of the work of the immigration service was discussed at these meetings, when officials confirmed that Ministers were fully seized of the recent pressures on the control; and then explained the short-term measures being taken to provide some relief; for example, bringing forward the recruitment and posting of staff who will be required for Heathrow, terminal 4; the further planned financial provision for increased immigration service resources in future years; and a set of studies, on which the unions will be fully consulted, which are designed to assess the effectiveness, efficiency and value for money of present as against alternative ways of working. Further meetings between officials and representatives of the unions are planned.

Prisoners (Police Cells)

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of prisoners being kept in police cells on 1 November attributable to the shortage of space in Her Majesty's prisons.

Mr. Mellor: On the night of 30 October-1 November there were 25 prisoners held in police cells. It is not possible to say from information held centrally precisely how many were held there because vacancies were not available in the right place at the right time and how many for logistical or other reasons.

Dr. Mark Patterson

Mr. Skeet asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when Dr. Mark Patterson, convicted in 1984 on a charge of conspiring to steal blood, is expected to be released from prison.

Mr. Mellor: It is not our general practice to make public the expected release dates of individual prisoners.

Civil Defence

Mr. Leigh asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will plan for total civilian involvement in defence in the event of war.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Civilian involvement in the military defence of this country is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence. The civil defence of this country concerns any organisation or person with a relevant responsibility or expertise, and present plannig takes account of this.

Gatwick Airport

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what arrangements he will be making for additional police at Gatwick airport when the north terminal opens in 1987.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The policing of Gatwick airport is carried out by the Sussex police under a repayment arrangement with the British Airports Authority. It is the responsibility of the Sussex police authority to fix the authorised establishment of the force, subject to my right hon. Friend's approval. We have not received an application from the police authority for an increase in the police establishment in order to meet additional policing requirements at Gatwick airport in 1987.

Animals (Experiments)

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list those interested organisations from which he has had responses on the White Paper, "Scientific Procedures on Living Animals"; and when he expects to introduce legislation arising from it.

Mr. Mellor: The major organisations which have submitted comments on the White Papers Cmnd. 8883 and Cmnd. 9521 are as follows:

Legislation based on the White Paper proposals—the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Bill—was introduced in another place on 14 November 1985.

HM Prison, Brixton

Mr. Irving asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average population of Brixton prison in the week ended 2 November or in any other recent typical week.

Mr. Mellor: On 31 October 1985 the population of Brixton prison was about 990. Average weekly population figures are not recorded centrally.

Mr. Irving asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many square feet of exercise space are available to prisoners in Brixton prison.

Mr. Mellor: Normally there are 39,461 sq ft of exercise space. Building work has resulted in the loss of 7,782 sq ft since October 1985, but this is expected to be reinstated by the end of this year.

Mr. Irving asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department for how many hours in the week ended 2 November or in any other recent typical week, the workshops in Brixton prison were open; what was the average number of prisoners employed; how many classes took place and for how many hours; what was the average number of inmates in each class; how many individual prisoners attended at least one class during the week; and how much time on average each prisoner spent out of his cell during that week.

Mr. Mellor: In the week ended 2 November, the one workshop at Brixton prison was open for 20 hours and employed 20 remand prisoners who requested work. In addition, 100 convicted prisoners were employed on various domestic and maintenance duties. Forty-two classes were held during the week, with a total class hours of 78½ and the average number of prisoners attending each class was six. Fifty-five prisoners attended at least one class. It is not possible to calculate the average amount of time spent out of cells, since this covers many things besides work and education; for example, visits, medical treatment and applications to see the governor.

Mr. Irving asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the maximum number of prisoners who can be employed in workshops in Brixton prison in any one day.

Mr. Mellor: Twenty-five.

HM Prisons (Wales)

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisons in Wales have the facility to hold, either on remand or on custodial sentence, women prisoners.

Mr. Mellor: None. Female remand prisoners from Wales would normally go to Pucklechurch or Risley; female sentenced prisoners go to Drake Hall or Styal.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether there has been any recent change regarding the rights of prisoners at Her Majesty's prisons to receive local newspapers or press cuttings from their home area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: No. The conditions under which prisoners may receive personal newspapers are set out in prison standing order 4. The only restriction on the receipt of press cuttings enclosed with general correspondence are those imposed in respect of the content of all such correspondence under standing order 5. Both standing orders have been published and copies placed in the Library. Copies are available for reference by prisoners in the prison libraries.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the estimated site value of Cardiff and Swansea prisons, respectively.

Mr. Mellor: Without knowing the purpose for which sites would be used, reliable valuation is not possible. Based on residential development, the estimated site values of Cardiff and Swansea prisons are approximately £1,250,000 and £450,000, respectively.

Mr. Miah (Member's Correspondence)

Mr. Malins asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to be able to reply to the letter of 25 October reference Mr. Miah TN3/RLE/6261/85; how long Mr. Miah has been in custody and in what places; when he expects to come to a decision in this case; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: I have written to my hon. Friend.

Mr. Mohd Ashad Miah was detained at Harmondsworth from 15 to 24 October and at Ashford remand centre from 24 October to 16 November, when he made a voluntary departure.

My letter gives the reasons for the immigration officer's decision to refuse entry to Mr. Miah and my confirmation of that decision.

Mentally Ill and Handicapped Prisoners

Mr. Welsh asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons suffering from mental illness or from a mental handicap are at present in prison; and how these numbers compare with each of the 10 pre ceding years.

Mr. Mellor: The number of inmates who, in the opinion of prison medical officers, are suffering from mental disorder of a nature or degree which would satisfy th criteria in the Mental Health Act 1959 and 1983 was as follows. There was no census before 1977, and the latest available figures are for 31 March 1985.

	Number
30 June 1977	769
30 June 1978	581
30 June 1979	557
30 June 1980	457
30 June 1981	320
31 March 1982*	287
31 March 1983	319
31 March 1984	310
31 March 1985	269

* The census month was changed in this year.

Prison Officers (Assaults)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the number of assaults that have taken place on prison officers during the past five years, the number of restraints on male or female prisoners and the number of prisoners who lost days of remission during the same period.

Mr. Mellor: The readily available information on assaults on prison officers and forfeitures of remission is summarised in the tables. Detailed breakdowns of offences and punishments are published annually in "Prison Statistics, England and Wales" (chapter 9 of the volume for 1984, Cmnd. 9622). Statistics on the use of restraints in the years 1981 to 84 are published in table 10.3 of "Prison Statistics, England and Wales 1984." Statistics for 1980 were published in table 10.6 of the volume for 1980 (Cmnd. 8372), but are less reliable and not comparable with those for subsequent years because a special exercise to check the corresponding figures for 1981 and 1982 revealed some errors, and corresponding checks cannot be made on the figures for earlier years.

West Midlands Police

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what increase he proposes to authorise in the establishment of the West Midlands police in the next three years.

Mr. Giles Shaw: We expect to receive shortly the manpower plans of the new joint police authority for the west midlands.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Juries (Hotel Costs)

Mr. Lawrence asked the Attorney-General on how many nights in each of the past five years juries in criminal trials have been sent to a hotel whilst considering a verdict; and what has been the total cost in each of those years.

The Solicitor-General: The information is as follows:

Year	Number of Nights	Hotel Cost £
1981	51	22,461
1982	71	39,387
1983	90	45,209
1984	107	56,130
1985 (to date)	105	50,411

Social Security Appeals Tribunals

Mr. Barnett asked the Attorney-General how many persons under the age of 35 years have been appointed to chairmanships of social security appeals tribunals since 1979.

The Solicitor-General: Social security appeals tribunals were established on 23 April 1984 and since then no barrister or solicitor of the requisite professional standing under the age of 35 has been appointed in England and Wales to be a chairman. Three chairmen under 35 were appointed between 1979 and 23 April 1984 to the national insurance local tribunals or the supplementary benefit appeal tribunals which were abolished and replaced by the social security appeal tribunals.

Mr. Barnett asked the Attorney-General how many serving councillors in local authorities have been appointed to chairmanships of social security appeals tribunals since 1979.

The Solicitor-General: This information cannot be ascertained without disproportionate costs. There may have been a few such appointments.

Social Security Commissioners (Hearings)

Mr. Frank Field asked the Attorney-General how long a claimant would normally have to wait for an oral hearing before a social security commissioner if the commissioner ordered the oral hearing now in (a) London, (b) Cardiff, (c) Edinburgh and (d) Northern Ireland.

The Solicitor-General: The figures for London and Cardiff are:

(a) 10 weeks
(b) 3 weeks

I understand from my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and Northern Ireland that the figures for Edinburgh and Northern Ireland are:

(c) 10 weeks
(d) 6 weeks

WALES

District Health Authorities

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales at what date the meeting originally arranged between the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Conwy, (Mr. Roberts) with the Gwynedd health authority, will be rearranged by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary with responsibility for health, the hon. member for Newport, West (Mr. Robinson).

Mr. Mark Robinson: I shall be meeting the chairman of Gwynedd district health authority, together with the chairman of the other health authorities in Wales on Friday 22 November. Following that meeting, a mutually convenient date will be arranged early in 1986.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a table including (a) the budgeted current and capital expenditure, respectively, and (b) the forecast actual, current and capital expenditure, respectively, of each of the new district health authorities in Wales, for the current year 1985-86.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The resources likely to be available to each district health authority in Wales in 1985-86 for current and capital expenditure is shown in the table.. The forecasts provided by individual health authorities suggests that their expenditure in 1985-86 will be contained within these allocated resources.

	Prospective Revenue Allocation £'000	Prospective Capital Allocation £'000
Clwyd	77·39	6·528
East Dyfed	48·41	1·614
Pembrokeshire	15·61	1·873
Gwent	94·15	4·187
Gwynedd	47·25	1·583
Mid Glamorgan	108·30	9·891
Powys	21·61	1·137
South Glamorgan	126·49	3·633
West Glamorgan	77·29	8·011

Note: The allocations take into account sums currently held in central reserves for specific developments. These will be released to the authorities when required. The capital allocations also include anticipated receipts from the sale of land and buildings which may or may not be realised this year.

Royal Aircraft Establishment, Aberporth

Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any plans to visit RAE Aberporth during 1985 to discuss the implications of the privatisation and contracting out of services with the superintendent of rangers and members of staff; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: I have no such plans. I am, however, in close touch with my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Defence Procurement, following the Cavanagh review.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Palace of Westminster

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Lord Privy Seal how many individuals are currently working in the Palace of Westminster and immediately associated buildings; and how many of these are Members of the House of Commons, Peers, secretaries, research assistants, officers of either House and employees of either House.

Mr. Biffen: The information requested is as follows.

	Number
House of Lords
Peers*	*937
Officers and Staff	272
Research Assistants	8
Lord Chancellor's Department	68
House of Commons
Members	650
Officers and Staff	945
Private Secretaries	586
Research Assistants	186
Temporary Secretaries and research assistants	438

[Note: Excluding peers without writs and those on leave of absence. The daily average attendance of peers is 321. It is not possible to indicate which individual peers' secretaries work regularly in the building.]

In addition some 700 staff are employed by associated organisations (such as the Property Services Agency, the Metropolitan police and the Post Office) performing functions for or on behalf of the two Houses; and the number of journalists accredited to the Parliamentary Press Gallery is 318.

These figures do not include Civil Servants who spend a proportion of their time working in the Palace.

PRIME MINISTER

Channel Fixed Link

Mr. Hickmet asked the Prime Minister if she will make a statement about the implications for the United Kingdom of the proposed construction of a fixed link across the Channel; and what effect she estimates the construction of such a link would have upon employment and the steel industry.

The Prime Minister: The four proposals for a Channel fixed link submitted by promoters in accordance with the Invitation to promoters are now being evaluated by a joint Anglo-French group of officials. Their evaluation will include an assessment of the impact of each scheme upon employment, not only in Kent but also throughout the economy generally. The Government will make a statement when their consideration of the alternative proposals is complete.

Quangos

Mr. Alton asked the Prime Minister if she will list the quangos presently operating.

The Prime Minister: A list of the non-departmental public bodies (commonly referred to as quangos) in existence on 1 April 1985 will be published early in December as "Public Bodies 1985". A copy will be placed in the House of Commons Library.

Service Men (Bomb Injuries)

Mr. Stott asked the Prime Minister, pursuant to her reply of 14 November, Official Report, column 682, why she stated that it was for the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe (Mr. Morris) to have contacted her office about her failure, first reported by the Daily Mail on 8 November, to reply to the letter sent to her last June by the mother of ex-Corporal David Timms, who was injured with the Royal Green Jackets in the bomb outrage of July 1982; and if she will make a further statement.

The Prime Minister: I have written to the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe (Mr. Morris) explaining that my office has no trace of having received Mrs. Timms' letter.

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Prime Minister, pursuant to her oral reply, 14 November, Official Report, column 682, to the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe, what action she has now taken in relation to the needs of the soldiers injured in the bomb outrage in Regent's park in July 1982 further to the pledge given when she visited them in hospital; when she replied to the letter reported to have been sent to her last June by the mother of ex-Corporal David Timms; and if she will make a further statement.

The Prime Minister: I have written to the right hon. Gentleman.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

International Youth Year

88. Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement about the Government's response to the International Youth Year 1985.

Mr. Dunn: The Government have responded to International Youth Year both directly—through funding for the four IYY co-ordinating committees — and through relevant programmes.

Speech Science

Mr. Rowe asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what information he has on the numbers of staff engaged in full or part-time teaching on courses leading to degrees in speech science, speech pathology or speech therapy and their places of employment;

(2) what information he has as to the number of students, and their place of study, sitting for examinations for degrees in speech science, speech pathology or speech therapy in 1983, 1984 and 1985 and the classification of honours awarded where appropriate;

(3) what information he has as to the numbers and location of courses at universities, polytechnics or other institution leading to degrees in speech science, speech pathology or speech therapy.

Mr. Walden: Details of courses in speech science, speech pathology or speech therapy and numbers of graduates are as follows:

	Institution	Course	1983 All first degree graduates	of which good honours graduates
a	GB universities
	University College, London	Speech sciences	46	16
	Manchester	Speech pathology and therapy	18	10
	Newcastle	Speech	8	4
	Reading	Linguistics and Language pathology	13	4
	Sheffield	Speech Science	14	5
b	England polytechnics
	City of Birmingham	Speech pathology and therapy	*20	*7
	Leicester	Speech pathology and therapy†	—	—
	Leeds	Speech therapy†	—	—
	Manchester	Remedial speech therapy†	—	—
c	England other institutions
	The Central school of speech and drama	Speech therapy†	—	—

Notes:
* 1984 graduates.

Information for university graduates in 1984 and all graduates in 1985 is not yet available.

From October 1985 the City university London, commenced a four-year first degree course in clinical communication studies. Information in respect of university higher degree courses is not available while in 1984 higher degree courses were offered in speech therapy at the city of Birmingham polytechnic and speech pathology and therapy at Leicester polytechnic.

The numbers of staff engaged in teaching courses leading to degrees in speech science, speech pathology or speech therapy and their place of employment is not available.

Student Loans

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science, pursuant to the answer, Official Report, 12 November, column 113, on what grounds, and according to what assumptions, the possibility of replacing maintenance grants wholly or partly with loans was ruled out by the Government for the present time.

Mr. Walden: The possibility of replacing maintenance grants wholly or partly with loans has been ruled out at the present time on economic grounds.

Swann Report

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what progress has been made towards implementing the recommendations of the Swann report, with special reference to the employment of teachers from the ethnic minorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: I would refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Battersea (Mr. Dubs) on 18 November at column 1.

Student Grants

Mr. Marlow asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make it his policy that student grants should not be paid to those who take action to prevent the freedom of speech being exercised.

Mr. Walden: The Government are totally committed to the cause of preserving freedom of speech at institutions of higher education. Action against students who seek to prevent it is a matter for the authorities of institutions. If students are sent down or suspended their local education authority has the power to terminate their grants.

Teachers (Courses)

Mr. Marlow asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will institute a survey into the extent to which individual local authorities provide cash benefits to teachers who attend courses during school holiday time over and above the direct costs of attendance.

Sir Keith Joseph: No. I do not consider that such a survey would serve any useful purpose.

Teachers' Dispute

Mr. Marlow asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information is available to his Department about which employers have made pay deductions from teachers in dispute and which have not.

Sir Keith Joseph: I understand that all local education authorities deduct pay from teachers who take strike action. However, the teacher unions have engaged in other forms of disruption, short of strikes, in order to prosecute their pay claim. I believe that only eight authorities continue to make deductions from teachers who, although present at work, refuse to cover for absent colleagues. I understand that no LEA is making deductions in respect of any other forms of disruptive action.

EMPLOYMENT

Labour Statistics

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Paymaster-General if he will give the figures for the number of redundancies notified in Great Grimsby for each year from 1979 to 1984.

Mr. Alan Clark: The available information relating to confirmed redundancies is given in the table.

Redundancies confirmed as due to occur in the Grimsby Jobcentre Area† from 1979 to 1984*

	Number
1979	Nil
1980	1,005
1981	1,886
1982	880
1983	1,436
1984	1,081

Notes:

* Confirmed by the Manpower Services Commission as due to occur and based on notifications of impending redundancies involving ten or more workers.

† Grimsby jobcentre area is the best available fit for Great Grimsby.

Explosives Legislation

Mr. Skeet asked the Paymaster-General whether he proposes to seek to amend the Explosives Act 1875, the Explosives Act 1923 and the Explosives (Northern Ireland) Act 1924, taking into account changes in the type and use of explosives so as to provide for a certificate of competence for people handling explosives.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Health and Safety Commission is progressively updating the Explosives Acts to take account of technological change. The Classification and Labelling of Explosives Regulations 1983 came into operation on 1 November 1983. A consultative document on the draft Conveyance of Explosives by Road Regulations has been published. The need for training and certificates of competence will be considered in due course.

Wage Costs

Mr. Richard Page asked the Paymaster-General what information he has as to the cumulative increases in wage costs in the United Kingdom over the last five and 10 years respectively; and what information he has as to how these figures compare with the equivalent figures for the United States of America, West Germany and Japan.

Mr. Alan Clark: Broadly comparable figures for the countries requested are only available for wages in manufacturing industries.

These are given in the following table.

Wages per head: Manufacturing

	*Great Britain	†USA	‡West Germany	Japan

Community Programme

Mr. Galley asked the Paymaster-General how many community programme places have remained vacant for three months or more during 1985.

Mr. Alan Clark: Statistics are not kept of the length of time that such vacancies remain unfilled, and the information requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Unemployment Statistics (London)

Mr. Freeson asked the Paymaster-General if he will provide a breakdown of the registered unemployed in (a) the London borough of Brent and (b) Greater London to show (i) the age and (ii) the type of worker involved.

Mr. Alan Clark: The following information is in the Library. The table shows the number of unemployed claimants in the London borough of Brent and Greater London as at 10 October 1985 analysed by age.

Some information by types of unemployed worker is available from the labour force survey at national and regional level, but the sample size is too small to produce such analysis for local authority districts.

Job Vacancies and Training (London)

Mr. Freeson asked the Paymaster General if he will provide a breakdown of the job vacancies available and vacancies for all available kinds of training and retraining in (a) the London borough of Brent and (b) Greater London.

Mr. Alan Clark: Analysis of unfilled vacancies at jobcentres is made quarterly both by industry, most recently in August, and by occupation, most recently in September. This information is available in the Library. Table 1 shows the numbers of unfilled vacancies in the area covered by the Kilburn, Wembley and Willesden jobcentres which closely corresponds to the London borough of Brent, and at jobcentres in Greater London, as at 2 August 1985 analysed according to the 1980 standard industrial classification. Table 2 gives the numbers of unfilled vacancies in the corresponding areas as at 6 September 1985 analysed by occupational group.

I will write to the right hon. Member shortly in reply to his enquiry regarding vacancies for training and retraining.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

South Africa

86. Mr. Haynes asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what measures are being taken to seek to ensure that no sensitive equipment is exported from Britain to South Africa.

Mr. Channon: The export of sensitive equipment to all destinations, including South Africa, is already controlled under the Export Goods (Control) Order 1985.

Information Technology

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the current cost to Her Majesty's Government for 1985-86 of maintaining the operational centres of the information technology centre programme.

Mr. Pattie: My Department, together with the Manpower Services Commission, provide the majority of governmental financial support to information technology centres. During 1985-86 it is currently estimated that, including trainees allowances, we shall jointly provide some £28·3 million.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what advice and guidance he has given to Alvey-funded research centres regarding their responses to requests for collaboration and information purchase from representatives of the United States information technology industry and the United States defence industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Pattie: I have received no requests for such advice and guidance.

Australia (Investment)

Mr. Lawrence asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what advice his Department offers British companies proposing to buy stakes in Australian companies about restrictions placed by the Australian Government upon foreign companies wishing to buy a controlling interest in an Australian company.

Mr. Butcher: Such companies would be advised to consult the Australian Government and, in particular, to take note of the Foreign Takeovers Act 1975. This gives the Australian Government powers to prevent or reverse transactions in which a foreign company gains a controlling interest in an Australian company, if the transaction is deemed to be contrary to the national interest.

Mr. Lawrence asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make representations to the Australian Government seeking reciprocity of treatment as between British companies wishing to buy into Australian companies in Australia, on the one hand, and Australian companies wishing to buy into British companies in the United Kingdom, on the other.

Mr. Butcher: If a case arises of a British firm experiencing difficulties in attempting to take over an Australian company, the Government would be prepared to consider taking the case up with the Australian Government where appropriate.

America (Foreign Technicians)

Sir Julian Ridsdale asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received from the Engineering Employers' Federation on new obstacles to visits by foreign technicians to the United States of America; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Channon: The director general of the Engineering Employers' Federation wrote to my right hon. and learned Friend about this matter earlier this month. I shall be replying to the director general shortly. The Government have joined in representations to the United States authorities who are themselves seeking to resolve the problem.

Estate Agents (Declaration of Interest)

Mr. John Fraser asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will seek to amend the Estate Agents Act to require estate agents to declare their interest in commissions on life insurance obtained in introducing purchasers to mortgages through the endowment method.

Mr. Butcher: No. The Financial Services Bill, which will be introduced shortly, will provide for the regulation of life insurance intermediaries of all sorts, including the disclosure of commission payments.

Manufacturing Investment

Mr. Richard Page asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will give figures for manufacturing investment in the United Kingdom in inflation adjusted terms for each year from 1974 to the latest year available.

Mr. Butcher: Available information on manufacturing investment only is given in the following table.

*Capital investment in United Kingdom Manufacturing Industry **

1975	7,135

British Steel Corporation

Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many people were employed in the special steels division of the British Steel Corporation in May 1979; and how many are so employed at the present time.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The special steels division did not exist under that name until 1980. In the BSC works which now constitute the special steels division, 15,721 people were employed in May 1979. The number in September 1985 was 8,520.

Selective Financial Assistance

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much money has been provided to companies in the Portsmouth travel-to-work area under section 7 of the Industry Act 1972, since 1972.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Section 7 assistance is available only to companies in the assisted areas of Great Britain and, as Portsmouth travel-to-work area has never been an assisted area, no regional selective assistance has been provided to companies in the area.

Export Credits Guarantee Department

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish in the Official Report (a) the numbers employed in the 725 companies currently using the Export Credits Guarantee Department's comprehensive bank guarantee schemes and (b) percentages of business activity involved in exports of their companies.

Mr. Channon: This information is not readily available.

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if the recent review of the Export Credits Guarantee Department's comprehensive external trade review will take into account both the financial outcome of the facility in the Export Credits Guarantee Department's terms and the wider economic impact of the facility for United Kingdom exporters.

Mr. Channon: Reviews of this facility take into account its impact on United Kingdom trade generally and the views of current users of these guarantees on all aspects.

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish an estimate of the impact of phasing out the Export Credits Guarantee Department's comprehensive bank guarantees on small exporters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Channon: The impact of phasing out these guarantees will be small. Banks and other financial institutions are able to provide finance for exports by viable companies without a guarantee direct from ECGD. The two-year period for phasing out the guarantees will allow ample time for exporters to transfer to alternative arrangements.

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish in the Official Report the amount paid out by the Export Credits Guarantee Department to private sector brokers in 1984-85; and if he will provide an estimate of their effectiveness.

Mr. Channon: The amounts paid by the Export Credits Guarantee Department to private sector brokers in 1984-85 totalled £2,486,000. It is up to individual ECGD policyholders whether to appoint a broker. It is not possible to quantify exactly the financial benefit to ECGD from the activities of brokers but I am satisfied that brokers play a useful role in selling and servicing ECGD cover and in relieving the Department of certain administrative functions. To be eligible for commissions, brokers have to conform to standards of conduct and competence laid down in an agreement between ECGD and the United Kingdom Credit Insurance Brokers' Committee.

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement about the future of the Export Credits Guarantee Department's comprehensive external trade guarantee; and if United Kingdom merchants and others can be assured of its continued availability.

Mr. Channon: The outturn of this guarantee facility has been under review periodically since changes were made to it in 1981 in an endeavour to reduce the high level of losses it was sustaining. I cannot anticipate the outcome of the review of the facility's outturn in 1985-86.

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish in the Official Report the total value of export finance advanced to United Kingdom exporters via the Export Credits Guarantee Department's comprehensive basic guarantee schemes over the last five financial years.

Mr. Channon: Finance for exports insured under ECGD's comprehensive guarantee schemes is made available by banks against the Department's comprehensive bank guarantees, where the exporter requests such an ancillary guarantee. The amounts of finance advanced and remaining outstanding under these arrangements at the end of the last four financial years totalled: 1981-82—£551 million; 1982-83 — £327 million; 1983-84 — £301 million; 1984-85—£184 million. Further amounts would have been advanced by the banks early in each year and repaid within that same year. The amounts for earlier years are not available.

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish in the Official Report the total cumulative losses under the Export Credits Guarantee Department's comprehensive basic guarantee schemes; and if he will list under each facility the percentage of total claims payments for that facility attributable to the 10 biggest loss-making individual guarantees.

Mr. Channon: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish in the Official Report the losses incurred by the Export Credits Guarantee Department in 1984-85, showing the amount and percentage due to political causes and the administration costs of the Export Credits Guarantee Department in the same year.

Mr. Channon: The total amount of claims paid by the Export Credits Guarantee Department in the financial year 1984-85 was £834·9 million, of which £683·5 million (82 per cent.) resulted from political causes of loss, mainly delays in the transfer of currency. The administration costs of the Department in the same year were £33·9 million.

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish in the Official Report the number of jobs lost as a result of the implementation of the recent review of management and organisation of the Export Credits Guarantee Department; and if he will estimate the resulting financial savings.

Mr. Channon: No jobs have been lost to date as a result of the implementation of this review's recommendations, which is continuing.

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make an estimate of the impact of the Export Credits Guarantee Department's comprehensive bank guarantees on total export orders and on employment arising from those orders.

Mr. Channon: Following a review of these guarantees, which included views solicited from those exporters making use of them currently, I reached the conclusion that phasing them out over a two-year period would have no significant effect on exports or employment levels in exporting companies. Alternative sources of finance are available.

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish in the Official Report a list of the future alternative sources of comparably priced export finance available for small companies.

Mr. Channon: A wide range of alternative sources of export finance is available from banks and other financial institutions, many of which publicise their facilities widely. The cost of such facilities is a matter between the provider and the user in each case.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Self-Employment (Taxation)

Mr. Leighton asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the number of tax units where the main source of income is self-employment income in 1984-85; and what were the equivalent figures for each of the previous five years.

Mr. Moore: The latest available information is for 1983-84. The number of tax units with main source self-employment income (usually but not invariably the largest source) in that year and comparable information for the previous five years is as follows:

Year	Number of tax units (thousands)
1978-79	1,690
1979-80	1,760
1980-81	1,820
1981-82	1,840
1982-83	1,970
1983-84	2,100

Taxation

Mr. Greenway asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the cost to public funds of a reduction in income tax to 25 and 20 per cent. respectively; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moore: The direct revenue cost of reducing the basic rate of income tax to 25 per cent. and 20 per cent. would be about £6 billion and £12 billion, respectively, in a full year at 1986-87 levels of income.

Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received regarding tax cuts.

Mr. Moore: Many.

VAT (Staff Disciplinary Procedures)

Dr. Mawhinney asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many Customs and Excise employees involved on value added tax work have been subject to disciplinary procedures in each of the last 10 years (a) nationally, (b) in the Halifax office and (c) in the Peterborough office.

Mr. Brooke [pursuant to the reply, 18 November 1985, c. 92]: Over the past 10 years, 222 Customs and Excise staff employed on value added tax work have been subject to disciplinary procedures for matters sufficiently serious to warrant report to headquarters. The numbers in each year are:

	Numbers
1976	35
1977	20
1978	18
1979	18
1980	21
1981	21
1982	21
1983	21
1984	20
*1985	14

* To date.

Four of these were employed in the Halifax VAT office, one case in each of the years 1976, 1979, 1980 and 1981, and two at Peterborough, both cases in 1979.

VAT

Mr. Ashdown asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give detailed estimates of the projected loss of revenue to the Exchequer from the possible abolition of value added tax on credit transactions between registered traders.

Mr. Brooke: Of the order of £2·3 billion a year. This is an estimate of the tax charged on taxable supplies to businesses which is at present irrecoverable by them. It includes estimates of VAT both on businesses expenditure on cars and entertainment and on taxable supplies to registered businesses with some exempt outputs. Although this loss could be prevented, it could only be at the cost of extra complexity both in the operation of the tax and for the trader.

Departmental Files

Mr. Cohen asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what arrangements operate for the logging of those who have access to (a) computer and (b) manual files kept by his Department on individuals; and if he will describe the procedures in operation for both categories.

Mr. Brooke: Specific guidelines on security of automatically processed data in Government Departments are observed. They are contained in "Protection of Information in Computer Systems" and "Central Government Code of Practice No. 21", issued by the Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency, which give recommended procedures to safeguard data in computer installations. Copies of these guidelines have been placed in the Library of the House.

Manual records are maintained in a number of areas in the Treasury. Access to records of individuals employed in the Department is restricted to the head of the Department and to the staff within the establishments and organisation group and personnel sections in locations.

The superannuation division of the Treasury makes pension awards to civil servants employed in a number of Departments. The manual records maintained by the division may only be accessed by the head of the pension awarding section and his staff.

Manual files containing pay and related information for employees of some 65 Government Departments are held at Chessington computer centre. Access to the files is limited to staff in the pay office directly concerned with the accounts. Where exceptionally other authorised people need access, eg Audit, movement of the file is recorded. Manual files despatched from the Centre are directed only to known authorised individuals in customer departments.

TRANSPORT

Planning Inquiries

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether it is his policy to appoint, to conduct planning inquiries into proposed road schemes, inspectors who have already reported on neighbouring and related developments and who, in so doing, have commented publicly upon aspects of the proposed schemes.

Mrs. Chalker: No. Inspectors for inquiries are nominated by the Lord Chancellor, but if the Secretary of State thought that an inspector might be prejudiced in conducting an inquiry by his experience on any previous inquiry or by any comments he had made, he would not appoint him.

M25 (Traffic Flows)

Mr. Richard Page asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is his estimate of the current number of vehicles using the stretch of the M25 from Hunton bridge to the M40 interchange per week; and how this figure compares with the figure predicted before that section was constructed.

Mrs. Chalker: The Department's forecasts for traffic flows on this length of M25 were in terms of an annual average for a 16-hour period on weekdays. No information is available about current flows for the length of M25 from the A412 link road to the A404 Chorley Wood. The figures for the sections on either side are given in the table.

Section of M25	16 hour weekday flow
	Annual Average Forecast for 1987 (made in 1980)	Measured Flow October 1985
M40 Interchange-A412	55,000-60,000 vehicles per day	66,000
A404-Hunton Bridge (A405)	65,000-75,000*	74,000

* This forecast was made at a time when this length of road existed as A405, but had no yet been appropriated as part of M25.

A127 (Safety Standards)

Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will institute a review of safety standards on the A127; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: We are continuously reviewing the scope for safety schemes to eliminate particular local hazards. Next year, consultants will be undertaking a study of the future needs of the A127.

Dartford Tunnel

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to announce the results of the current inquiry into the feasibility of a third Thames crossing at Dartford.

Mrs. Chalker: I announced in June, at columns 225-26, our intention of commissioning an engineering study for a third crossing at Dartford. My right hon. Friend, however, suggested to the Select Committee in July that the private sector might be willing to undertake the provision of a third crossing, and the inquiries we have had from construction and financial undertakings have confirmed their interest in this proposition.

We shall shortly be issuing guidelines inviting interested parties to submit proposals, and commissioning data collection work on the engineering aspects to help the preparation of proposals.

Mr. Speed asked the Secretary of State for Transport if there are any proposals to close temporarily one of the lanes of the Dartford road tunnel for repairs; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: The tunnel is wholly the responsibility of Kent and Essex county councils. I understand that it is planned to carry out a major refurbishment of the northbound tunnel over a period of two years, starting in early 1986. Work will be carried out on weekdays at night, from 9 pm (11 pm on Fridays) to 5.30 am (7 am on Saturdays). There will be no closures in July and August. The aim is to cause little or no disruption. One or other tunnel is in any case closed most nights for routine maintenance.

Folkestone-Honiton Trunk Route

Mr. Speed asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is the latest situation on improvements to the Folkestone-Honiton trunk route.

Mrs. Chalker: There are a total of 21 national schemes currently in the roads programme to improve the route between Folkestone and Honiton. Details of how each scheme is progressing are as follows:

A259 Rye bypass, East Sussex	Route options being investigated with a view to public consultation in 1986.
A259 Winchelsea bypass, East Sussex	Hope to announce preferred route shortly, with view to draft order publication late 1986.
A259 Bexhill and Hastings western bypass, East Sussex	New scheme added this year. Design agency to be appointed early 1986.
A27 Pevensey bypass, East Sussex	Draft line and side roads orders published. Draft compulsory purchase order to be published shortly.
A27 Polegate bypass, East Sussex	Scheme restored to programme this year. Design agency to be appointed early 1986.
A27 Brighton bypass, East/West Sussex	Route fixed. Hope to publish draft compulsory purchase orders summer 1986.
A27 Patching junction improvement, West Sussex	Scheme restored to programme this year. Design agency to be appointed early 1986.
A27 Arundel bypass, West Sussex	New scheme added this year. Route options being investigated with a view to public consultation by early 1987.
A27 Fontwell bypass, West Sussex	Final decision announced with a view to start of works in summer 1986.
A27 Westhampnett bypass, West Sussex	Hope to announce preferred route shortly. Earliest start date spring 1989.
A27 Havant-Chichester, Hampshire/West Sussex	Tenders to be invited shortly for start of works spring 1986.
A31 Ashley heath grade separated junction, Dorset	New scheme added this year. Consulting engineers to be appointed in 1986.
A31 Ferndown bypass, Dorset	Under construction. Scheduled for completion February 1987.
A35 Tolpuddle to Puddletown bypass, Dorset	Restored to active programme June 1985. Consulting engineers will shortly be appointed to prepare the scheme.
A35 Yellow Ham hill to Troytown, Dorset	Public consultation on possible options currently in progress.

A35 Dorchester bypass, Dorset	Public inquiry held at beginning of 1985. Secretaries of State now considering inspector's report.
A35 Bridport link road, Dorset	Public inquiry held autumn 1984. Decision announced October 1985. Expected to start work towards the end of 1986.
A35 Chideock-Morecombelake bypass, Dorset	Restored to active programme June 1985. Consulting engineers to be appointed very shortly to prepare scheme.
A35 Charmouth bypass, Dorset	Public inquiry has just finished. Awaiting inspector's report.
A35 Axminster bypass, Devon	Preferred route announced May 1985. Draft orders to be published during 1986.
A35 Honiton link, Devon	Draft orders have been published. Design is being reconsidered.

In addition, A27 Langstone flyover, Hampshire was opened to traffic on 1 November.

Preparation work on the following further schemes has been temporarily suspended:

A35 Winterbourne Abbas bypass, Dorset	Under active study.
A35 Wilmington bypass, Dorset	Under active study.
A259 New Romney, Dymchurch, St. Mary's Bay and Hythe bypasses, Kent	To remain suspended pending review.

Heavy Goods Vehicles

Mr. Patchett asked the Secretary of State for Transport what legislation, and in what time scale, he has in mind to change the duration of heavy goods vehicle drivers' licences and the free driving tests for heavy goods vehicle drivers if they develop a limb disability; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Government have accepted the recommendations of the working party on medical standards that the duration of heavy goods vehicle drivers' licences should be five years, as for public service vehicle drivers, and that the driving test to establish a licence-holder's continued fitness after developing a limb disability should be free of charge. The necessary parliamentary legislation will be introduced at the next opportunity, but I cannot yet say when this will be.

Mr. Patchett asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he is now prepared to consider a specialist panel of advisers to give advice on appeals for heavy goods vehicle drivers if they lose their licences on medical grounds.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My hon. Friend the Member for Wallasey (Mrs. Chalker) announced on 14 June 1985 that there would not be a specialist panel to give advice on appeals against decisions taken by the licensing authorities on medical grounds. My right hon. Friend has, however, appointed two new honorary medical panels to advise licensing authorities on cardio-vascular conditions and diabetes in relation to driving. A similar panel on driving and disorders of the nervous system has existed for many years.

Mr. Patchett asked the Secretary of State for Transport what advice will be forthcoming from his Department to unions and employers to help them frame improved insurance schemes for heavy goods vehicle drivers if they lose their licences and jobs on medical grounds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is a matter for negotiation within the road transport industry.

Hurn Airport

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for Transport what are the implications for Hurn airport, Christchurch, Dorset, of the Government's proposals for local authority owned airports; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: If Parliament approves the Government's proposals, Bournemouth (Hurn) airport is likely to be required to adopt company form. This will bring several advantages as described in paragraphs 9.15 and 9.16 of the Government's White Paper on airports policy (Cmnd. 9542).

SCOTLAND

Departmental Files

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what arrangements operate for the logging of those who have access to (a) a computer and (b) manual files kept by his Department on individuals; and if he will describe the procedures in operation for both categories.

Mr. Younger: Specific guidelines on security of automatically processed data in Government Departments are observed. They are contained in "Protection of Information in Computer Systems" and "Central Government Code of Practice No 21" issued by the Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency which give recommended procedures to safeguard data in computer installations. Copies of these guidelines have been placed in the House Library.

There are no corresponding centrally issued guidelines in relation to the logging of access to manual files; and procedures vary according to the confidentiality or sensitivity of the data held.

List D Schools

Mr. Steel asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will make a statement giving the value of direct grants to list D schools in Scotland in the last financial year;

(2) what is the amount by which the rate support grant will be increased to reflect the increase in expenditure falling on local authorities as a result of grants to list D schools being terminated.

Mr. Younger: In 1984-85 direct grants of £5·36 million were paid to 18 voluntary list D schools representing half the costs of accommodating children placed by local authorities plus the full costs of accommodating children placed following court proceedings.

I have proposed to the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities that relevant expenditure and aggregate exchequer grant should be increased in 1986-87 by £3·9 million to reflect in full the additional costs falling on authorities in respect of children placed by them in 13 remaining voluntary schools which will no longer receive direct grants. A further sum estimated at £2 million will be payable in 1986-87 in the form of direct grants to two voluntary schools providing secure accommodation and in payment of the full costs of accommodating children placed in the schools following court proceedings. Assistance will also be made available towards certain closure costs of any voluntary schools ceasing to operate in 1986.

Drug Abuse

Mr. Craigen asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the findings and data obtained in the report of the standing conference on drug abuse fieldwork survey in the Greater Glasgow health board published in October, a copy of which has been sent to him.

Mr. John MacKay: This valuable report, which was commissioned and funded by my Department, recognises the difficulty of making accurate assessments of the nature and extent of drug misuse. The extent of the problem in local communities must therefore be kept under continuous review by all agencies concerned. This should provide the basis for determining the need for treatment and rehabilitation services and for developing appropriate local strategies for prevention. The report also stresses the need for effective arrangements for co-operation and co-ordination among local agencies concerned with the problem of drug misuse.

Mrs. McCurley asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will indicate the steps that are being taken to involve the education service in Scotland in the campaign against drug misuse in Scotland.

Mr. Younger: The education service has an important part to play in combating drug misuse among young people in Scotland. I have today issued a circular to education authorities which outlines various measures being taken to help and encourage them in this. In addition to the continuing public information and education campaign to prevent and discourage drug misuse which was launched by the Scottish Health Education Group in February, the circular describes two new initiatives:

(i) over the years 1985-86 and 1986-87 I am providing funds totalling £57,000 to the Consultative Committee on the Curriculum for a project for the preparation of teaching materials which has been set up in liaison with Strathclyde Regional Council. It is expected that materials from this project will be available to schools throughout Scotland during session 1986-87;

(ii) the specific grant scheme for in-service training 1985-86 has been extended to cover training programmes introduced by education authorities for key teachers on drugs issues on the basis of guidelines drawn up by a national planning group chaired by Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Schools. A sum of £100,000 has been set aside in 1985-86 for this purpose. The scheme will continue in 1986-87.

In addition in the course of its normal visits to schools Her Majesty's Inspectorate will discuss with headteachers their school policies and machinery for tackling drug misuse.

I seek the co-operation of all sectors of the education service in combating the growing menace of drug misuse and I hope that the initiatives introduced today will make a positive contribution to that end.

A copy of the circular introducing these new measures (SED Circular No. 1135) has been laid in the House Library.

UNESCO

84. Mr. Fisher asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on United Kingdom membership of UNESCO.

Mr. Raison: The UNESCO general conference finished on 9 November. Ministers will now consider whether, in the light of the results of the conference, taken together with any other relevant developments in the organisation during this year, enough has been achieved to warrant reconsideration of the British decisions to withdraw.

Port Stanley (Hospital)

Mr. Lilley asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made on the new hospital in Port Stanley.

Mr. Raison: Work has now begun on site for the construction of a new shared civilian and military hospital in Stanley. It will comprise an acute care wing, to be named the Prince Andrew wing, and a civilian health centre and administrative facilities to be converted from existing buildings. There will also be sheltered housing for the elderly and staff accommodation. The construction contract has been awarded to the Fairclough-Miller joint venture. Site supervision will be by Building Design Partnership, which carried out the detailed design work and prepared the tender documentation.

The overall cost of the project will be £11·3 million. Contributions towards the cost of the sheltered housing have been made by Mr. Jack Hayward (£1 million) and the States of Guernsey (£100,000). The remaining costs will be shared between the Overseas Development Administration (£6·1 million) and the Ministry of Defence (£4·1 million). The project is scheduled for completion in January 1987.

DEFENCE

Research and Development Budget (University Sector)

Mr. Steel asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the criteria used to determine the amount of his Department's research and development budget allocated to the university sector.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Research and development work is placed with the university sector when they are best able to carry it out and are interested in doing so. Some £10 million will be spent with them in 1985-86. This figure is expected to rise with the introduction of joint Research Council-Ministry of Defence research grants, announced on 4 November 1985.

Technology Transfer

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's policy on technology transfer in the light of the report introduced at the meeting of the North Atlantic Assembly in San Francisco recently.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The Government's policy remains as set out in the statement on the Defence Estimates 1984 (Cmnd. 9227-I): to balance the requirements of legitimate civil trade with those of national and Alliance security, and to ensure that export controls focus on areas of genuine strategic concern where they can be effectively enforced.

Nimrod

Mr. Favell asked the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects the Nimrod airborne early warning system to be operational.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Kingston Upon Hull, North (Mr. McNamara) on 29 October 1985 at column 474.

Procurement

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the location by parliamentary constituency of the facilities of United Kingdom based defence procurement contractors paid £5 million or more for equipment in 1983-84, 1984-85 and 1985-86.

Mr. Norman Lamont The information requested is given for 1983-84. That relating to the years 1984-85 and 1985-86 is not yet available.

* Work carried out at British Manufacture and Research Co Ltd, Grantham.

Many of the above firms carried out work for the MOD at a number of sites, but payment is made only to one or more central locations. In these cases it has only been possible within the resources available to identify the companies' HQ locations.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the location and number by parliamentary constituency of (a) Ministry of Defence civilian personnel, (b) armed forces personnel and (c) employees of defence procurement contractors in receipt of £5 million or more in 1984-85.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Particulars are not held of the location and number by parliamentary constituency of Ministry of Defence civilian and armed forces personnel, and employees of defence procurement contractors. United Kingdom service and civilian personnel strengths by national totals for England, Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland, and by regions of England are published in tables 4.9 (Service Personnel) and 5·4 (Civilian Staff) of the Statement on the Defence Estimates 1985, part 2 (Cmnd. 9430-II). The names of contractors in receipt of £5 million or more in 1983-84 are published in annex G of part 1 of the White Paper and will be updated for 1984-85 when the 1986 White Paper is published.

Bases and Facilities

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will list the location by parliamentary constituency of (a) all United States non-nuclear bases in the United Kingdom and (b) all United Kingdom non-nuclear bases in the United Kingdom;

(2) if he will list the location by parliamentary constituency of (a) all Royal Air Force facilities in the United Kingdom and (b) all United States bases and facilities in the United Kingdom;

(3) if he will list the location by parliamentary constituency of (a) all royal ordnance factories, (b) all royal dockyards and (c) all Ministry of Defence facilities, itemising them also;

(4) if he will list the location by parliamentary constituency of (a) all army barracks and (b) all Royal Navy bases in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I will answer shortly.

HMS Otter and Euryalus (Refit Costs)

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will seek the consent of the parties concerned to the disclosure of the value of the contracts to refit HMS Otter and HMS Euryalus.

Mr. Norman Lamont: No. It is, however, my intention to publish some indication of the comparison of costs between these two refits and those of the two similar ships which are being undertaken at Devonport dockyard.

Gurkhas (Hong Kong)

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many Gurkha troops are now stationed in Hong Kong.

Mr. Stanley: On 31 October, there were about 5,000 Gurkhas stationed in Hong Kong.

Host Nation Support

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will list the technical arrangements which have been made between the United Kingdom and the Federal Republic of Germany following the 1983 treaty on host nation support during crisis or war;

(2) what technical arrangements or other provisions have been made for German civilians provided to assist United Kingdom forces during crisis or war;

(3) if he will list the subjects of all technical arrangements which may be desired by either party which remain to be concluded between the United Kingdom and the Federal Republic of Germany following the 1983 treaty on host nations support during crisis or war.

Mr. Stanley: The formal arrangement under which German civilians would assist United Kingdom forces during crisis or war was signed between Her Majesty's Government and the Government of the Federal Republic on 13 December 1983. No technical arrangements under that agreement have been concluded to date, but a number are being prepared which will require support in such areas as:

Transport
Food and supplies
Fuel
Communications
Use of civil airfields and ports
Vehicles, plant and construction equipment
Maintenance and repair services
Civil labour

Ptarmigan Project

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the Ptarmigan project.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Ptarmigan will provide a secure, digital, tactical communications system for the Army and RAF in North West Europe, covering the forward, rear and communications zones. It will also become the bearer system for future command, control and information systems such as WAVELL and BATES.

The system is based on a lattice of communications centres, independent of the chain of command, and interconnected by secure multi-channel radio links. Groups of users, such as Headquarters, are connected by similar secure links and the communications centres provide automatic switching facilities between users.

Development of the main programme was completed in 1984 and Ptarmigan is now well into production, although development work on additional items will continue for several more years. The system is already in operation with the first divisional user in BAOR. It is planned that a second division will be equipped by the end of this year and the whole of 1(BR) Corps by mid-1986, with the system extended to the rear areas by the end of the decade.

Current programme costs are estimated at some £1·1 billion.

As regards the recently announced decision by the US Government to purchase a mobile subscriber equipment from GTE working with the French, rather than from Rockwell, which was working with Plessey, we are naturally disappointed that the decision went the way it did. We are investigating the background to the result of the US competition and hope that we can draw useful lessons from it.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Central America (War on Want Delegation)

3. Mr. Sedgemore asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received from members of the recent War on Want delegation to central America.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend, like all hon. Members, recently received a circular letter. As the letter urges we will continue to consider carefully our response to the Luxembourg meeting of EC-Central America and Contadora Foreign Ministers. My right hon. and learned Friend attended this meeting on 11 November and my right hon. and noble Friend attended on both 11 and 12 November.

Israel

14. Mr. Hoyle asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, at the next meeting with his Soviet counterpart, he will ask him to renew diplomatic relations with Israel.

Mr. Renton: My right hon. and learned Friend would expect to discuss middle eastern questions with Mr. Shevardnadze if he accepts our invitation to visit London. The precise agenda would be decided nearer the time.

Third World Debts

19. Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with other EEC Foreign Ministers regarding debts in the Third world; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: We remain concerned by the burden of debt carried by many developing countries. This is a subject I discuss regularly with my European Community colleagues.

EC Intergovernmental Conference

20. Mr. Michie asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs why the United Kingdom has not submitted any proposals for changes in the EEC treaties to the intergovernmental conference.

Mr. Rifkind: We have already put forward practical proposals for improvements in decision-taking which could be implemented immediately without treaty amendments. They remain on the table.

Cyprus

21. Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last visited Cyprus; and if he will list the people he met.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend stayed overnight in Cyprus on 27 October 1984. He was unable to meet the President or Foreign Minister on that occasion because they were overseas. But he has other regular opportunities to see them. Most recently he saw President Kyprianou at the United Nations last September.

Argentina

22. Mr. Lofthouse asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will take immediate steps to facilitate the resumption of diplomatic relations with Argentina.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: We have taken a series of initiatives since 1982 to improve bilateral relations with Argentina. Unfortunately Argentina has not so far reciprocated. We believe that agreement on practical measures of benefit to both sides offers the best way of making progress.

58. Mr. Yeo asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about progress being made in developing relations with Argentina.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: As I told the House during the debate on the Address on 8 November [Vol. 86, c. 221-2], we have since 1982 taken a series of initiatives designed to open the way to practical co-operation with Argentina. Unfortunately Argentina has not so far reciprocated. We very much hope that the Argentine Government will come to see that this is the only realistic way to make progress.

South Africa

23. Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the progress of internal reforms in South Africa.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: As I made clear to the House on 23 October [Vol. 84, c. 305-13] we recognise that positive steps have been taken. However, we remain convinced that what is urgently needed now is a dialogue between the South African Government and genuine representatives of the black community.

47. Dame Judith Hart asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's policy following the report of the United Nations panel for the public hearings on the activities of transnational corporations in South Africa and Namibia.

Mr. Rifkind: We did not participate in these pblic hearings. We remain convinced that transnational corporations make an important contribution to the goal of peaceful change in South Africa. We shall continue to urge British companies to comply fully with the provisions of the EC code of conduct.

49. Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has made any recommendations to British nationals working in South Africa concerning their future security.

Mr. Rifkind: No.

55. Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the use of sanctions as an instrument of foreign policy in South Africa.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: We are opposed to the use of economic and trade boycotts against South Africa since in our view they would be damaging to the prospects for peaceful change and harmful to the black population and to neighbouring countries.

59. Mr. Hirst asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the current situation in South Africa.

Mr. Rifkind: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Peterborough (Dr. Mawhinney) earlier today.

68. Mr. Evans asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government will make it their policy to make representations on grounds additional to humanitarian grounds in cases where the South African Government proposes to execute persons who oppose the apartheid régime.

Mr. Rifkind: The basis for any representations which we might make must depend on the particular circumstances of the case, but we have usually considered it most appropriate and effective to make representations on humanitarian grounds.

73. Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what facilities his Department provides for trade delegations to South Africa.

Mr. Rifkind: In accordance with the programme of action which we agreed with our Commonwealth partners at Nassau, we will no longer be funding trade missions to South Africa. The last such mission will end on 6 December. Diplomatic posts in South Africa will, however, continue to provide advice and assistance to individuals or groups who visit South Africa to promote the export of goods and services on the same basis as elsewhere.

74. Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the South African authorities about restrictions placed on British journalists working in South Africa.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave earlier to the hon. Member for Walsall, North (Mr. Winnick).

79. Mr. John Carlisle asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last discussed the situation in South Africa with His Excellency Dr. Denis Worrall, the ambassador of the Republic of South Africa to the Court of St. James.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: We have made our views known to the South African Government at ministerial level on numerous occasions, most recently on 24 October.

81. Mr. Bowen Wells asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the effect of the statement at the Nassau conference of Commonwealth Heads of Government on South Africa has had on that Government's domestic policies towards the black population.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: We hope that the South African Government will respond positively to the accord reached by the Commonwealth Heads of Government at Nassau, both in its policies towards the black population and in its co-operation with the proposed Eminent Persons Group.

African National Congress

24. Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will now arrange to meet representatives of the African National Congress.

Mr. Rifkind: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply my right hon. and learned Friend gave earlier today to the hon. Member for East Lothian (Mr. Home Robertson).

Falkland Islands (United Nations Debate)

25. Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has held with other EEC countries concerning the forthcoming United Nations debate on the Falklands.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: We keep in close touch with our European partners on a wide range of issues arising at the United Nations, including the question of the Falkland Islands. The details of these exchanges must remain confidential.

Nigeria (British Prisoners)

26. Mr. Bruce asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the imprisonment of two British helicopter engineers in Nigeria.

Mr. Rifkind: Two British engineers employed by Bristows Helicopters were convicted in the Lagos high court on 7 October on charges of stealing and conspiracy to steal an aircraft and were sentenced to 14 years' imprisonment. We have made a number of high level representations to the Nigerian Government to express our concern at the severity of these sentences. An appeal has now been submitted and is expected to be heard early next year. We have expressed the hope to the Nigerian authorities that the appeal will be dealt with expeditiously and lead to an equitable outcome.

Central America

27. Mr. James Lamond asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has held with the United States of America concerning American involvement in central America.

Mr. Eggar: We regularly discuss all important issues, including the situation in central America, with the United States Government at a number of levels and they are fully aware of our views.

37. Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what actions Her Majesty's Government are taking to support the Contadora process.

Mr. Eggar: Our consistent support for the Contadora process was demonstrated most recently by our full and constructive participation in the EC-central America Ministerial meeting in Luxembourg on 11 and 12 November.

Jordan

28. Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further discussions he has had with the Government of Jordan following the cancellation of talks with the Palestine Liberation Organisation and Jordanian representatives.

Mr. Renton: I met King Hussein on 16 October; we remain in close touch with the Jordanian Government.

Pakistan

29. Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about Her Majesty's Government's present relations with the Government of Pakistan.

53. Mr. Spencer asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a statement on diplomatic relations with Pakistan.

Mr. Eggar: We maintain good relations with Pakistan.

Qatar

30. Mr. Leigh asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on relations with the state of Qatar.

Mr. Renton: We continue to enjoy strong and close relations with Qatar. Clearly it gains new strength and vigour from the state visit the Amir paid to Britain last week. Of importance too are the visits of the sort my hon. Friend took part in in October when a delegation of Members of this House visited Doha.

EC (Priority Objectives)

31. Sir Anthony Meyer asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are his present priority objectives within the European Community.

60. Mr. Patchett asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the Government's priorities within the EEC for the forthcoming Session.

Mr. Rifkind: Our objectives are early completion of the Common Market improvements in decision-taking, reform of the common agricultural policy, improvements in world trade rules and co-operation on foreign policy.

EC (Trade Barriers)

32. Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has made about barriers to trade within the Community to the European Economic Community Council of Ministers.

Mr. Rifkind: These matters are discussed primarily in the Internal Market Council, where my right hon. Friend the Minister for Trade (Mr. Channon) represents the United Kingdom. At the meeting on 7 October he called for early progress on the removal of barriers to trade in accordance with the conclusions of the European Council at Milan last June.

Multilateral Disarmament

33. Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what measures Her Majesty's Government are proposing in concert with other countries to achieve multilateral disarmament; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: We participate actively in most multilateral disarmament fora and are of course consulting closely with our allies on the range of issues under discussion in these fora. Our principal aim must be to achieve verifiable and balanced agreements to reduce the threat of nuclear or conventional conflict while maintaining our national and Alliance security.

EC Reform

34. Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made in the discussions on European Economic Community reforms; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave earlier to the hon. Member for Wallsend (Mr. Garrett).

Lebanon (Kidnappings)

35. Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps have been taken by Her Majesty's Government concerning the release of Western diplomats and journalists kidnapped in Lebanon.

Mr. Eggar: We have regularly made it clear that the holding of American, French, Italian and British hostages in Lebanon serves no useful purpose. We urge those responsible to release all the hostages unharmed. We are particularly concerned about Alec Collett, a Briton, and Dr. Thomas Sutherland, a dual British-American national. Representations on their behalf have been made to several Governments in the middle east. We will continue to work for the release of the hostages and to keep in close touch with the US, French and other Governments.

Foreign Ministers (EC and Central America)

36. Mr. Dixon asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the recent summit in Luxembourg of Foreign Ministers from the EEC and central America.

Mr. Eggar: The Luxembourg meeting was a practical demonstration by the members of the European Community of support for the Contadora peace process. Political and economic agreements with the central American states were successfully concluded. The European Community agreed to increase substantially aid to promote economic co-operation in the region.

Latin America (Debt)

38. Mr. Park asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the measures taken by the United Kingdom to alleviate the Latin American debt crisis.

Mr. Rifkind: We are continuing to work with other Governments, international institutions and banks to help the Latin American countries to tackle their debt problems flexibly and effectively.

Falkland Islands Fishery Zone

39. Mr. Shersby asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the progress of his discussions with other nations on the establishment of a Falkland Islands fishery zone.

Mr. Eggar: We are in contact with all Governments with an interest in the south-west Atlantic fishery. We have impressed on them the need for a multilaterally-based fisheries conservation and management regime, and urged them to participate in the FAO's constructive initiative to this end. We are encouraged by the statement made on 12 November by the Argentine Secretary for Agriculture, Livestock and Fisheries, advocating a technical assessment by the FAO of fishery resources and fishing activity in the area.

EC (Development)

40. Mr. Roy Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he is proposing a further meeting with his European Economic Community counterparts in the Council of Ministers to discuss future developments in the Community.

Mr. Rifkind: The Inter-Governmental Conference will meet again on 26 November to discuss the future development of the Community.

46. Mr. Knox asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further proposals he intends to place before his European Community partners for the development of Community policies.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: We will work for the objectives set out in the Queen's Speech. We shall make further proposals as the need arises.

South Africa (Delegation)

41. Mr. Caborn asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will take steps to ensure that Her Majesty's Government's member of the Commonwealth delegation visiting South Africa has no economic interests in South Africa.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: The British nominee to the Group of Eminent Persons established by the Commonwealth Heads of Government in Nassau is Lord Barber. His wide experience of government and international affairs has been increased by his chairmanship of the Standard Chartered Bank in which capacity he has had the opportunity to gain first-hand knowledge of South Africa and many other African countries.

Geneva Arms Talks

42. Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about progress at the arms talks in Geneva.

Mr. Renton: The recent Soviet proposals, put forward in response to earlier US proposals, are unbalanced and self-serving. But they contain positive elements on which we can build. The United States Government have put forward fresh proposals, building on their earlier approach, responding to concepts in the Russian ideas on which progress might be made, while rejecting obviously one-sided features. We have given our full support to this new United States move.

Extradition

43. Dr. Michael Clark asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the countries with which the United Kingdom does not have extradition arrangements; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The countries are as follows:

Afghanistan	Laos
Algeria	Lebanon
Andorra	Libya
Angola	Liechtenstein
Bahrain	Madagascar
Benin	Maldives
Brazil	Mali
Brunei	Mauritania
Bulgaria	Mongolia
Burkina	Morocco
Burma	Mozambique
Burundi	Nepal
Cambodia	Niger
Cameroon	Oman
Cape Verde	Pakistan
Central African Republic	Philippines
Chad	Qatar
China	Rwanda

An extradition treaty was, however, signed with Spain on 22 July 1985, and will come into force after ratification by both countries.

EC (Home Market Integration)

44. Mr. Baldry asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on progress being made to ensure an integrated home market within the European Community.

Mr. Rifkind: The United Kingdom is working closely with Luxembourg and the Netherlands on the basis of the Commission's White Paper and the priorities identified by the Milan European Council to prepare a co-ordinated programme for action during our respective presidencies of the Community between now and the end of 1986.

Gibraltar

45. Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further discussions he has had with the Spanish Government regarding the lifting of the ban on airspace and ferry services which have been imposed on the dependent territory of Gibraltar.

Mr. Eggar: Following the full re-opening of the frontier on 5 February 1985, Spanish Government removed obstacles to land, sea and civil air traffic. We are in discussion with the Spanish authorities about the continuing restrictions on the flight paths of military aircraft using RAF Gibraltar.

Battlefield Nuclear Weapons

48. Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the implications for arms control of the modernisation of battlefield nuclear weapons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: The future shape of NATO's short-range nuclear systems following the Montebello decision in 1983 to reduce them by 1,400 warheads, has been reviewed by the Alliance. Arms control considerations will be taken carefully into account as implementation of the decision takes place. Such systems are not at present the subject of arms control negotiations. Priority is rightly being given by the United States and Soviet Union to reaching agreements on the strategic and long-range intermediate categories.

Fylingdales (Facilities)

50. Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the United States Government about the question of updating facilities at Fylingdales, in relation to the anti-ballistic missile treaty.

Mr. Renton: Discussions about the American proposal to modernise the installation at Fylingdales are still in progress with the United States Administration. We are confident that both the continued existence and modernisation of the ballistic missile early warning system at Fylingdales will be in full conformity with American obligations under the anti-ballistic missile treaty.

South Africa (Air Defence System)

51. Mr. Beith asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he is now satisfied that the air defence system supplied by Plessey to the South African Government is not capable of and was not purchased for military use and was not in breach of the United Nations embargo.

Mr. Rifkind: The original export licence application was approved in 1974 on the understanding that the equipment was required in South Africa for an integrated air traffic control system, with a civil application. We have yet to see evidence that the equipment was intended for a primarily military use.

Palestine Liberation Organisation (Policy)

52. Dr. M. S. Miller asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list each statement made in 1985 by the Palestine Liberation Organisation regarding its policy towards accepting that part of the agreement between King Hussein and Yassir Arafat of 11 February which accepts United Nations Security Council resolution 242 and recognises the existence of the state of Israel.

Mr. Renton: We have noted no statement by the Palestine Liberation Organisation relating solely to these points. But PLO leaders, most recently Mr. Arafat in Cairo on 7 November, have frequently reaffirmed the importance of the 11 February agreement.

Latin America

54. Mr. O'Brien asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has held with the United States of America concerning United States policy in Latin America.

Mr. Eggar: We regularly discuss all important issues, including the situation in Latin America, with the United States Administration. They are fully aware of our views.

Saudi Arabia

56. Mr. Mikardo asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether Her Majesty's Government have sought assurances from the Saudi Arabian Government that military equipment supplied by the United Kingdom to Saudi Arabia will not be used against Israel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: A formal understanding for the sale of Tornado, Hawk and PC-9 aircraft to Saudi Arabia was signed on 26 September. Negotiations of a detailed memorandum of understanding will be concluded early next year. We have no reason to believe that Saudi Arabia intends to use Tornado and other aircraft supplied by Britain for other than its preferred aim of all-round deterrence. Saudi Arabia and her neighbours in the Gulf co-operation council face a number of threats, notably because of their proximity to the theatre of the Iran-Iraq war and the danger of Soviet expansion in the Horn of Africa.

East-West Relations

57. Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the current state of East-West relations.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: We remain firmly committed to our policy of working for better East-West relations. We have been active in Europe. 1985 has brought some encouraging developments, in particular the resumption of US-Soviet nuclear arms control negotiations and the meeting between President Reagan and Mr. Gorbachev which is currently under way in Geneva. We hope that meeting will lead to real progress in the arms control negotiations and an improvement in relations between the two countries.

Zimbabwe

Mr. Patrick Thompson asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the implications for relations between the United Kingdom and Zimbabwe of moves towards a one-party state in Zimbabwe.

Mr. Rifkind: Constitutional changes in Zimbabwe are matters for Zimbabweans. The Zimbabwean Government have expressed an intention to proceed with any changes by constitutional means.

Middle East

62. Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a statement on the peace process in the middle east.

Mr. Renton: I refer to my hon. Friend to the reply given by my right hon. and learned Friend to the hon. Member for Westbury (Mr. Walters) earlier today.

69. Mr. Andrew MacKay asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next intends to seek to visit the middle east.

Mr. Renton: My right hon. and learned Friend hopes to visit the middle east again early in the new year.

75. Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he proposes to take further new steps to resolve the problems in the middle east.

Mr. Renton: The prime responsibility for a resolution of conflicts in the middle east must remain with those directly involved, but we shall continue to support all realistic initiatives towards peaceful solutions.

78. Mr. Robert C. Brown asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he has taken to encourage King Hussein to enter direct talks with Israel following the call of the Israeli Premier Shimon Peres at the United Nations and what responses he has received.

Mr. Renton: We keep in close touch with King Hussein and fully support his initiative which envisages early peace negotiations under appropriate auspices. We welcome Mr. Peres' acknowledgement in his speech to the United Nations General Assembly in New York on 21 October of the need for an international framework for negotiations.

Guatemala

63. Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on relations with Guatemala following the recent elections.

Mr. Eggar: We have no diplomatic or consular relations with Guatemala, which broke diplomatic relations in 1963 and consular relations in 1981. The elections in Guatemala have not yet concluded.

Budgetary Discipline

64. Mr. Golding asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he is satisfied with the results achieved by the budgetary discipline arrangements discussed by EEC Foreign Ministers in the current year.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: The draft 1986 budget established by the Council on 17 and 18 September was within the maximum level of permitted expenditure for 1986 established by Ministers in July and in accordance with the budget discipline arrangements agreed last year.

Soviet Jewry

65. Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has requested the American Government at the forthcoming summit meeting between President Reagan and Mr. Gorbachev to raise the plight of Jews in the Soviet Union.

Mr. Rifkind: President Reagan and other members of the US Administration have said that human rights matters will be on the summit agenda.

Anglo-American Relations

66. Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what contribution he expects the Treasure Houses of Britain exhibition to make to Anglo-American relations.

Mr. Eggar: I should expect the exhibition, as a major cultural manifestation strongly supported by both countries, to make a significant and valuable contribution to Anglo-American relations.

Those who have sent objects, as well as the organisers, should be congratulated. Both Governments have given it their full support. The exhibition can be seen as part of the United Kingdom's general promotion in the United States which also demonstrates our contemporary industrial and technological strength.

The visit of their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales has excited considerable enthusiasm which can only be of benefit to Anglo-American relations.

Moscow

67. Mr. Temple-Morris asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any plans to seek to visit Moscow.

Mr. Rifkind: My right hon. and learned Friend has no present plans to do so.

President Reagan-Mr. Gorbachev (Meeting)

70. Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has any plans to meet the United States Secretary of State to discuss the outcome of the summit meeting between President Reagan and Mr. Gorbachev.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister and I will attend the meeting of the North Atlantic Council in Brussels on 21 November when the President of the United States, accompanied by Secretary Shultz, will discuss with other Alliance leaders the outcome of his meeting with Mr. Gorbachev.

Soviet Foreign Minister

71. Mr. Gregory asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any plans to meet the Soviet Foreign Minister.

Mr. Rifkind: My right hon. and learned Friend met Mr. Shevardnadze in Helsinki in August and in New York in September. He has invited him to pay a visit to the United Kingdom; dates have not yet been agreed.

77. Mr. Lawrence asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the Soviet Foreign Minister on the importance of existing international obligations being honoured before new obligations are entered upon.

Mr. Rifkind: In his speech to the meeting held to mark the tenth anniversary of the Helsinki final act, my right hon. and learned Friend made clear our concern at Eastern failure to live up to their existing conference on security and co-operation in Europe commitments on human rights and that we would keep this issue firmly on the East-West agenda. Similarly in the field of arms control, we have stressed the need for strict fulfilment by all parties of their obligations under the provisions of arms control agreements.

80. Mr. Woodall asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether, in view of the top level contacts now being made by the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America, he will seek to impress upon the Soviet Foreign Minister the importance of complying with the human rights obligations under the Helsinki final act.

Mr. Rifkind: We have consistently made clear in our contacts with the Soviet leadership that we expect them fully to comply with the human rights provisions contained in the Helsinki and Madrid documents. We shall continue to do so. The United States Administration have already raised human rights issues with Mr. Shevardnadze and President Reagan has said he will do so when he meets Mr. Gorbachev in Geneva.

Palestine

72. Mr. Marlow asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement with regard to the Government's policy with regard to Palestine.

Mr. Renton: We support all constructive moves by the parties towards a balanced negotiated settlement which provides for the right of the Palestinian people to self-determination and for Israel's right to exist within secure and recognised borders.

Namibia

76. Mr. McCartney asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps are being taken to implement United Nations Security Council resolution 566 on Namibia.

Mr. Rifkind: We abstained on this resolution and are not involved in its implementation.

Jordanian-Palestinian Delegation

82. Mrs. Renee Short asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the cost to Her Majesty's Government of the aborted joint Jordanian-Palestinian delegation to London.

Mr. Renton: Approximately £3,600.

Portugal

83. Sir Russell Johnston asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking through the Council of Ministers to ensure that Portugal receives substantial financial and economic assistance through the European Community after accession.

Mr. Rifkind: The financial arrangements agreed with Portugal during the enlargement negotiations reflected the Community's intention that she should be a modest net beneficiary from the Community's budget. The precise extent to which she is able to benefit from Community membership will also depend on her ability to take advantage of Community financial mechanisms such as the structural funds.

Nicaragua

85. Mr. John Fraser asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will represent to the Government of the United States of America that the trade embargo on Nicaragua should be lifted.

Mr. Eggar: The United States Government are well aware of our views on this matter.

British Embassy, Moscow

Mr. Speed asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the number of Soviet citizens employed in the British embassy and residences in Moscow.

Mr. Eggar: There are 79 Soviet citizens employed in the British embassy and residences in Moscow. Of these, 66 are direct employees of the embassy with 7 of them employed in the ambassador's residence; a further 10 are in the houses of other United Kingdom-based staff, and 3 are part-time cleaners.

Soviet Embassy, London

Mr. Speed asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has as to how many United Kingdom citizens are employed in the Soviet embassy and residences in London.

Mr. Eggar: So far as we are aware, no United Kingdom citizens are employed at the Soviet embassy or at the residences of members of the staff of the embassy.

United Nations

Mr. Proctor asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give a breakdown of Her Majesty's Government's assessed and voluntary contributions to the United Nations and its agencies in 1984; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The United Kingdom made the following assessed contribution to the United Nations and its agencies in 1984:

Organisation	£ sterling
United Nations Regular Budget	21,744,474
Food and Agriculture Organisation	8,152,459
World Health Organisation	7,484,000
International Labour Organisation	4,059,000
International Atomic Energy Authority	2,471,000
International Telecommunication Union	1,637,250
Universal Postal Union	1,023,800
International Civil Aviation Organisation	940,390
World Metrological Organisation	930,039
World Intellectual Property Organisation	357,601
International Maritime Organisation	335,398
United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organisation	324,246
International Centre for the Study of the Preservation and Restoration of Cultural Property	56,000
Permanent Court of Arbitration	8,755
Commission on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination	5,456

The United Kingdom also made the following voluntary contibutions in 1984:

Organisation	£ sterling
United Nations Peacekeeping	23,811,837
United Nations Development Programme	20,000,000

Organisation	£ sterling
Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees	13,225,000
United Nations Childrens Fund	6,000,000
United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East	5,000,000
United Nations Border Relief Organisation	5,000,000
International Fund for Agricultural Development	4,242,000
World Health Organisation Programmes	3,406,700
General Agreement on Tariffs and Trades	1,246,694
World Food Programme	1,000,000
International Atomic Energy Authority Technical Assistance	783,000
United Nations Environment Programme	750,000
United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control	700,000
United Nations Industrial Development Organisation	300,000
United Nations Educational and Training Programme for South Africa	50,000
United Nations Decade for Women	50,000
International Telecommunications Union	50,000
World Metreological Organisation Voluntary Co-operation Fund	20,000
United Nations Victims of Torture	10,000
Polish Refugees in Lebanon	4,000

The bulk of these contributions is found from the votes of Foreign and Commonwealth Office and the Overseas Development Administration. But significant contributions are also made by other departments as appropriate. The normal cost of membership of UNESCO is about £5 million per annum. The cost was reduced in 1984 by refunds from previous years due to currency fluctuation.

Mr. Proctor asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much money the British Government have contributed towards the United Nations Year of Peace; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: We are among the large majority of United Nations states which have not contributed to the United Nations voluntary fund established to finance commemorative activities in New York. We intend to mark the International Year of Peace by organising a conference on peace-keeping, and the peaceful resolution of conflicts. The cost of this is likely to be £5,500.

Our view is that members of the United Nations can most effectively demonstrate their commitment to the aims of the International Year of Peace by pursuing policies which genuinely further peace and through practical support for efforts to maintain peace in areas of potential conflict, for example by contributing to international peace-keeping forces.

Israel (Torture Allegations)

Mr. Marlow asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will raise with the Israeli Government allegations of torture of Palestinians by Israelis on the West Bank.

Mr. Renton: I do not know what allegations my hon. Friend has in mind. We keep in close touch with the Israeli authorities about human rights in the occupied territories. They are well aware of our views.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Pornography

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what measures the Government are taking in Northern Ireland to seek to prevent the spread of pornography; what representations he has received on this matter in the last 12 months; and whether the Government are contemplating any changes to the present law on pornography in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Tom King: I believe that present provisions are adequate to control pornography in Northern Ireland and therefore have no plans to take additional preventative measures through changes in the existing law. During the past 12 months I have not received any representations identifying a significant problem in this field.

Library Books

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what are the amounts of expenditure by education and library boards on library books for each year from 1975 to 1984 inclusive;

(2) what are the amounts of expenditure by education and library boards on library books per head of population for each year from 1975 to 1984 inclusive.

Mr. Needham: The information is as follows:

Financial Year	£ 000 Board Expenditure	Per Capita Expenditure
1975-76	1,861	1·21
1976-77	2,218	1·44
1977-78	2,797	1·82
1978-79	3,078	2·00
1979-80	2,762	1·79
1980-81	2,625	1·70
1981-82	2,268	1·45
1982-83	1,880	1·20
1983-84	2,154	1·37
1984-85	2,176	1·38

Armagh Prison

Ms. Clare Short asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many strip searches have been performed in Armagh prison in each quarter since strip searching was introduced.

Mr. Tom King: Prisoners admitted to Armagh prison have always undergone a full reception search. Records have only been maintained since 5 November 1982. The information available is as follows:

Quarter ending	1982	1983	1984	1985
31 March		*517	88	*145
30 June		*290	99	*169
30 September		*269	66	74
31 December	400	142	102	—

* These figures include searches carried out on life sentence prisoners —two in 1983 and one in 1985—engaged in prerelease working-out programmes who each entered and left the prison more than 50 times each month. The prisoner engaged in the programme in 1985 was given the option of being located in an area of the prison which would have removed the need for her to be searched but she chose to remain located with other prisoners.

Ms. Clare Short asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many women have been held on remand in Armagh prison in each quarter since strip searching was introduced.

Mr. Tom King: The details requested are set out in the following table.

Quarter ending	1982	1983	1984	1985
March	—	14	7	13
June	—	15	9	6
September	—	11	10	8
December	16	8	8	—

Notes

1. The above figures, which relate to the last Sunday in each quarter, include women on remand or awaiting trial, and those detained in the young offenders centre.

2. Prisoners admitted to Armagh prison for the first time have always undergone a full reception search. In November 1982 it was decided to implement this type of search for all admissions to and discharges from the prison including attendance at court hearings. Since March 1983 prisoners attending court for remand hearings or for trial are strip-searched on a random basis only.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Foster Parents (Payments)

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will take steps to require regular returns to be made to his Department by local authorities on payments made to foster parents of severely handicapped children.

Mr. Hayhoe: No. Local authorities already provide regular returns of the annual expenditure incurred on boarded out children, but this does not differentiate between the handicapped child and others and I do not think the additional burden of having to provide information specifically on payments made to foster parents of severely handicapped children could be justified.

New Cross Hospital (Cancer Unit)

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has reached a decision on the proposed closure of the Hedley Atkins breast cancer unit at New Cross hospital.

Mr. Whitney: We have not received any proposal to close this unit.

Departmental Files

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what arrangements operate for the logging of those who have access to (a) computer and (b) manual files kept by his Department on individuals; and if he will describe the procedures in operation for both categories.

Mr. Major: Specific guidelines on security of automatically processed data in Government Departments are observed. They are contained in "Protection of Information in Computer Systems" and "Central Government Code of Practice No. 21", issued by the Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency, which give recommended procedures to safeguard data in computer installations. Copies of these guidelines have been placed in the Library.

Benefit and other files in central and local offices are available to all staff needing access to them for the efficient conduct of business. Security is enforced by physical and technical barriers, and members of staff are not allowed access to their own benefit, medical or personnel records nor, where known, to those of relatives or friends, but no centralised or local access record is maintained.

Disability Allowances

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what provision is made to provide disability allowances for people who become handicapped after reaching pensionable age.

Mr. Newton: Disability benefits available to someone who becomes handicapped after pensionable age include attendance allowance, if he or she requires frequent or prolonged attention from others, and industrial disablement benefit, if the disability is the result of an accident at work or a prescribed industrial disease. Women may be entitled to mobility allowance if they become unable, or virtually unable, to walk before they reach age 65. The supplementary benefit scheme has provision for certain additional needs of handicapped claimants to be taken into account in calculating their entitlement.

Attendance Allowance

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the upper age limit for people desirous of claiming an attendance allowance.

Mr. Newton: There is no upper age limit for claiming or receiving attendance allowance.

Benefits

Mr. Andrew Bowden asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many pensioner householders he estimates are receiving supplementary benefit additional requirements for service charges and ground rent paid by leaseholders; and what is the average amount of additional requirement paid for this purpose;

(2) how many pensioners living in special leasehold housing schemes for the elderly receive supplementary benefit or housing benefit.

Mr. Major: I regret that the information requested is not available.

Nurses' Accommodation (Disposal)

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to receive proposals from regional health authorities in connection with the disposal of accommodation at present occupied by nurses.

Mr. Hayhoe: By 31 December 1985.

Community Care

Mr. Gerald Howarth asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he is in a position to publish the Government's response to the Social Services Committee report on community care with special reference to adult mentally ill and mentally handicapped people.

Mr. Hayhoe: The Government response is published today (Cmnd. 9674). We welcome the support given by the Committee, and the overwhelming majority of those who gave evidence, to community care as a philosophy and as a practicable proposition. The response confirms the priority we attach to the development of an integrated network of mainly local services capable of supporting meaningful community living and of meeting special needs. Changes in role, contraction or closure of large hospitals must be accompanied by the development of alternative services. Although much has been and is being achieved, much remains to be done; and all those concerned have a responsibility for making the most of available resources to develop a comprehensive range of local residential and other support services to meet the needs of individual mentally ill and mentally handicapped people.

Health Authorities

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what consideration he has given to the information sent to him by the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe, concerning the resource and manpower implications for health authorities in England and Wales of the Education Act 1981; what action he has taken or will be taking; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: The information provided by the right hon. Member is a paper about the implications of the Education Act 1981, sent to officials in June 1985 by the National Association of Health Authorities in England and Wales (NAHA) following a meeting in October 1984. Detailed comments were sent to the authors in September 1985 with the offer of a further meeting.

We are aware that in places the introduction of the new procedures has presented problems to health authorities and identified a need for services that are not always immediately available. We have made clear that no additional resources can be made available to health authorities specifically related to the implementation of the Act, although as the right hon. Member is aware my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Science has allocated some additional resources to assist with specific aspects of special education. Solutions to the problems must be found locally by the authorities working together to set up practical procedures and find the most effective way of using resources. The NAHA paper was intended to help this process.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what finance he intends to offer to health authorities for the financial year 1986-87 to enable them to honour the doctors' and nurses' pay awards and to meet rates of inflation.

Mr. Hayhoe: We are increasing current spending on the hospital and community health service by £650 million (6·7 per cent.) in 1986-87 compared with a forecast increase in general inflation of 4·5 per cent. Authorities will also have available their growing cost improvement programme. From within these resources authorities will be expected to meet pay and price increases, including the full year effects of the 1985 review body awards, and develop services.

Drugs

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many drugs have been referred to the advisory committee on National Health Service drugs; by whom; and which drugs are currently under consideration.

Mr. Hayhoe: The Advisory Committee on National Health Service Drugs receives representations from the pharmaceutical industry and medical profession. Some of the information is supplied to the committee on a confidential basis. The committee will be keeping under review all drugs in the therapeutic categories covered by the selected list scheme.

Hospital Closures

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many wards have been closed down in hospitals in the Inner and Greater London areas and the West Midlands region in each year since 1979; and which hospitals have been affected by these closures during the same period.

Mr. Whitney: We collect information only about closures which are both permanent and sufficiently significant to require formal consultation procedures to be used. Ward closures are not separately identifiable.

Social Security Appeal Tribunals

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many cases have been won against his Department by (a) pensioners and (b) unemployment or supplementary benefit claimants at social security appeal tribunals in each year since 1979.

Mr. Major: The available information is provided in the tables. Statistics on appeals are analysed in respect of the various social security benefits rather than client groups.

NHS Hospitals (Private Patients)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many beds in National Health Service hospitals were paid for by private patients; what was the total revenue collected each year since 1979; and what proportion of the patients were admitted for (a) urgent operations and (b) non-urgent operations.

Mr. Hayhoe: The available information is given in the table. A classification of hospital patients by degree of urgency of operation is not available centrally.

Disabled Persons (Discrimination)

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many cases of discrimination against disabled people have been referred to his Department in the past six months; what action he is taking; if Her Majesty's Government will be reviewing their position on anti-discrimination legislation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: In the last six months, one individual complaint about alleged discrimination against a disabled person has been referred to the Department for investigation. As the case arose in Wales, it was passed on to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales and I understand a reply has been sent by his Department. The Government remain unconvinced of the case for general anti-discrimination legislation. In our view a better approach is to identify the practical difficulties which disabled people face and to try to overcome them, whether through legislative means or otherwise.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr. Baldry asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proposals Her Majesty's Government are making to reform the common agricultural policy.

Mr. Jopling: We shall continue to press for a more market-oriented price policy as a central feature of measures to improve the CAP. This is the best way of containing the costs of the CAP and of attaining a better market balance of supply and demand. At the same time we shall press for application of the financial guideline for agriculture. We shall also insist that Community measures do not discriminate unfairly against the United Kingdom.

Farmers (Adverse Weather Compensation)

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what measures he proposes for the relief of farmers who have suffered from adverse weather conditions.

Mr. Jopling: The Government intend to provide aid for those livestock farmers who have been worst affected by the weather and I hope to make an announcement shortly.

Sea Defences and Land Drainage

Mr. Colin Shepherd asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the organisations which submitted comments on the Green Paper on land drainage; how many of these express the opinion that the sea defences of the United Kingdom coastline should be a national responsibility; and if he will make a statement on future policy in this area in the light of the opinions submitted.

Mrs. Fenner: The organisations and individuals who submitted comments on the Green Paper are listed below. Thirty-two of these submissions (19 per cent.) expressed the opinion that sea defences and other coastal works should be treated as a national responsibility. The comments are still under consideration and no decisions on future policy have as yet been made.

Mr. Colin Shepherd asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he proposes to take in respect of United Kingdom sea defences and land drainage under the grant-aiding powers currently available.

Mrs. Fenner: Our powers under the Land Drainage Act 1976 to grant aid land drainage and sea defence capital works are permissive. It is for drainage authorities to put forward schemes that can be considered for grant. The financing and administration of sea defence and land drainage is currently under review following the publication of our Green Paper last March.

Pesticides

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will list those substances known to occur in pesticide products as contaminants which have, or are believed to have, some form of biological activity, or whose principal metabolites fall into this category; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will list, for each chemical approved for use as a pesticide, contaminants arising in the course of manufacture of the biologically-active element which themselves have, or are believed to have, some form of biological activity, or whose principal metabolites fall into this category; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Fenner: The information requested is not readily available and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost. However I can assure the hon. Member that all biological activity of pesticides is evaluated, whether arising from the active ingredient, other components of the formulation or likely contaminants.

Home-Grown Cereals Authority and Meat and Livestock Commission (Membership)

Mr. Hardy asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the names and, where appropriate, the other occupations of the members of (a) the Home-Grown Cereals Authority and (b) the Meat and Livestock Commission.

Council of Agriculture Ministers

Mr. Andrew Stewart asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the outcome of the Council of Agriculture Ministers' meeting held in Brussels on 18 and 19 November; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jopling: With my right hon. Friend the Minister of State, I represented the United Kingdom at the meeting of the Council of Agriculture Ministers in Brussels on 18 and 19 November 1985.

The Council had a first exchange of views on the latest Commission ideas for adjusting the cereal regime. These will now be discussed in detail by a group of senior officials. The Commission intends to present its proposals for discussion by the Council in December.

There was further discussion of the Commission's proposals for sugar for the next five years, for sugar for the chemical industry and for amending the starch regime. No decisions were reached.

The Council discussed a proposal for extending the payment of annual premium at 80 per cent. of the full rate to goats in certain regions and to shearling ewes of the Herdwick breed in the Lake District. I made it clear that this latter arrangement should apply to certain other slower maturing breeds in the Lake District and in certain areas of Scotland. The Commissioner was not prepared to amend the proposal, and the President decided to consult the acceding countries on that basis to press for the additional coverage.

The Council discussed again arrangements for minimum standards for hens in battery cages. It was not possible to reach conclusions and the Council will come back to this in December.

On hormones, the Commission presented a proposal for banning the use of three natural and two synthetic hormones as growth promoters in cattle. The Commission explained that this proposal was in line with the opinion recently expressed by the European Council. I argued that it was a mistake to take decisions without regard to scientific evidence and drew attention to the problems of control and of trade with third countries. The proposal will be examined in detail by officials before further discussion in the Council.

ENVIRONMENT

South Africa (Rugby Matches)

87. Mr. Ron Lewis asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps are being taken to seek to ensure that the planned Rugby Union matches between a South African side and the British Lions do not take place.

Mr. Tracey: I have already made clear to the president and secretary of the English RFU the Government's opposition to the tour. The Government will continue to do everything possible to persuade British rugby, whose responsibility the decision is, to reject the South African invitation. In line with Government policy, the Sports Council does not make funds available to support sporting contacts with South Africa.

Renovation Grants

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list the total number and amounts of renovation grants paid to (a) private landlords and (b) private tenants in (i) England, (ii) Wales and (iii) London in each calendar year since 1980 by type of grant;

(2) if he will list the total number and amount of special grants paid to private landlords in (a) England, (b) Wales and (c) London in each calendar year since 1969.

Sir George Young: The available estimated figures are as follows:

EC Grants (Textiles)

Mr. Wainwright asked the Secretary of State for the Environment which parts of west Yorkshire have been allocated grants from the EEC fund for areas of textile closure; and what is the amount of each such grant.

Mr. Tracey: The details of ERDF non-quota textile grants offered in west Yorkshire to date are as follows:

Rating Reform

Sir Peter Emery asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether, in view of the number of specific inquiries into rating reform, he will publish a White Paper, rather than a further discussion document, setting out the Government's intention, on rate reform with a view to legislation being introduced during the next Session of Parliament.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend's studies encompass the whole of local government finance. The document which he intends to publish will cover other issues in addition to rate reform, and full consultation will be appropriate on these matters.

Housing Programme Allocation

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to grant the extra housing programme allocation only to local authorities which undertake not to insist on onerous contractual conditions for private contractors in order to benefit their own direct labour organisations; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: Whilst I entirely share my hon. Friend's criticism of discriminatory contract conditions which is implied in his question, this is not a factor which it would be appropriate to take into account in making any allocations to local authorities.

Teachers' Dispute

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the likely impact of the current negotiations on teachers' pay on the anticipated level of domestic rates for the forthcoming year; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The impact on expenditure of the 1985-86 teachers' pay settlement will depend upon its final level. The effect on rates will vary between local education authorities according to their circumstances and the steps they take to make off-setting savings.

Housing Standards

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in the Official Report for each English housing authority (a) the numbers of unfit dwellings, (b) the numbers of dwellings fit but lacking basic amenities and (c) the numbers of non-standard dwellings in need of renovation, indicating in each case the percentage of total stock affected; and if the number is higher or lower than at the same date in 1984.

Mr. John Patten: Local authorities' housing investment programme returns for 1984 and 1985 included their estimates of defective dwellings in their areas at 1 April each year. Numbers reported are not necessarily comparable as authorities' criteria may differ and in total they are not consistent with estimates from the English house condition survey of 1981. The figures requested are as follows:

Housing needs appraisal: dwelling stock position at 1 April 1985
Region: North (Exc. Cumbria)

Housing (Portsmouth)

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will increase the Portsmouth housing investment programme allocation by an amount equal to the cost of refurbishing the Portsdown Park housing estate.

Sir George Young: The housing investment programme allocations for individual authorities for 1986-87 have not yet been decided.

Home Insulation Grants

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will increase the amount of money available for home insulation grants.

Sir George Young: My right hon. Friend is currently considering what amount of money will be available for home insulation grants for the next financial year. An announcement will be made shortly.

Landlord and Tenant Act 1954

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the findings of the review of the current working of part II of the Landlord and Tenant Act 1954.

Mr. Tracey: My right hon. Friend is grateful for the many and varied comments received. Generally they support the view that part II of the Act still works satisfactorily, and that the balance of rights between both parties to business lettings — particularly where small businessmen are involved either as tenants or landlords, is being maintained. We are not convinced that the case for legislative changes to Part II is sufficiently strong to warrant legislation. My Department is advising those consulted accordingly.

Local Authority Expenditure

Mr. Moynihan asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will tell local authorities what they can spend on housing and other services for 1986.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I announced in answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Staffordshire (Mr. Heddle) on 12 November at column 113-16 that gross provision for capital expenditure on housing in 1986-87 would be £3,250 million, an increase of £200 million on the provision for 1985-86. I have now decided that of that total, £2,532 million should be for the local authorities, £685 million for the Housing Corporation and £31 million for the new towns. Gross local authority authority provision has been increased from £2,324 million in 1985-86 to £2,532 million for housing and from £621 million to £668 million for the other services block.

I have decided not to change for 1986-87 the prescribed proportion of capital receipts from the sale of assets which local authorities may use for additional capital expenditure. But since receipts continue to grow, authorities in England will have power to spend substantially more on the strength of their new and accomulated receipts in 1986-87 than in 1985-86.

In order to bring expenditure into line with this increased provision account must be taken in setting allocations of the spending power from receipts and of the increasing use local authorities are making of other opportunities for capital expenditure. The totals available for capital expenditure allocations to local authorities on the housing and other services blocks for 1986-87 will therefore be £1,465 million and £294 million respectively.

I am consulting the local authority associations on the distribution of these allocations, and on the need to give greater priority to the renovation of the local authority housing stock.

EMPLOYMENT

Community Programme

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Paymaster General how many jobs have been offered to unemployed citizens in Wolverhampton and the west midlands on the community programme.

Mr. Alan Clark: 82,432 people have entered the community programme in the midlands region since its start in October 1982; 8,558 of them were in the combined Wolverhampton and Walsall area. A separate breakdown for west midlands and Wolverhampton is not available.

Asbestos

Mr. Hancock asked the Paymaster General under what circumstances the Health and Safety Executive is called in to monitor the excavation of asbestos from outdoor dumps.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Responsibility for ensuring the safe removal of asbestos lies with those undertaking the work. Such work is subject to the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 and associated legislation. The Health and Safety Executive is the enforcing authority at these sites. The frequency of visits to a particular site depends on the degree of hazard. Health and Safety Executive inspectors also have power to investigate complaints.

European Community Regulations

Mr. Marlow asked the Paymaster General if he will institute a process such that, for every measure passed by the European Economic Community, an estimate is given of the effect on manpower requirements in industry.

Mr. Trippier: Departments will be assessing the likely impact on industrial manpower and costs of proposed community initiatives on a similar basis to that of proposals for domestic regulations. The European Commission will be reporting to the Council of Ministers in December on a number of related matters including the scope for action by the Commission.

Bus Manufacturing Industry

Mr. Robert Hughes asked the Paymaster General if he will publish in the Official Report a list of the numbers employed in the bus manufacturing industry in each of the five years prior to phasing out of the new bus grant, and the numbers employed in that industry in each year since that date, providing his Department's estimate of the number of jobs generated by each job in bus manufacture.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Department's employment estimates are analysed according to the 1980 standard industrial classification, which does not separately distinguish the manufacture of buses.

Average Earnings

Mr. Skinner asked the Paymaster General what is the figure for the average earnings of full-time (a) male and (b) female workers in the east midlands compared with the national figure at the latest available date.

Mr. Alan Clark: The latest information relates to full-time employees on adult rates working a full week in April 1985. Figures of average gross weekly earnings for employees in the east midlands and in Great Britain are published, for males, in table 12 and, for females, in table 13 of "New Earnings Survey 1985", part A. A copy is in the Library.

Overtime

Mr. Skinner asked the Paymaster General what is the average weekly overtime worked by (a) males and (b) females in the (i) east midlands, (ii) south-east, (iii) west midlands, (iv) north, (v) south-west and (vi) north-west.

Mr. Alan Clark: The latest information relates to full-time employees on adult rates working a full week in April 1985. Figures of average weekly overtime hours for employees in each region of Great Britain are published, for males, in table 12 and, for females, in table 13 of "New Earnings Survey 1985", part A. A copy is in the Library.

British Tourist Authority and English Tourist Board

Mr. Hickmet asked the Paymaster General whether he intends to proceed with a merger of the British Tourist Authority and the English Tourist Board.

Mr. Trippier: Following consultation with my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland, and with Mr. Duncan Bluck, the chairman of both the British Tourist Authority and the English Tourist Board, we have concluded that there should be no further steps towards a merger of the two bodies. The present arrangements whereby the boards share common premises and have certain common services departments are working well. A merger, which would require amendment to the Development of Tourism Act 1969 would probably yield little further gains in efficiency and could lead to difficulties in the promotional activities of the BTA in relation to Scotland and Wales.

NATIONAL FINANCE

European Community (Own Resources)

Mrs. Currie asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the payment in November of December non-value added tax own resources to the European Communities.

Mr. Brooke: In accordance with article 10(2) of Council Regulation 2891/77, the Commission invited member states to pay on 20 November instead of 20 December non-VAT own resources collected in October. These own resources consist of agricultural, sugar and isoglucose levies and customs duties. Following scrutiny of the need for the early payment, the Government have paid an amount of £134 million to the Commission. The payment of levies and duties on 20 December 1985 made under section 2(3) of the European Communities Act 1972 will be reduced by a corresponding amount. There will therefore be no net addition to public expenditure.

Council of Finance Ministers (Meeting)

Dr. Michael Clark asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the outcome of the latest meeting of the European Community's Council of Finance Ministers.

Mr. Lawson: The ECOFIN Council met in Brussels on 18 November. I represented the United Kingdom.

In the light of the conclusions of the Milan European Council, consideration was given to the question of amendment of the provisions of the Treaty of Rome concerned with monetary co-operation. No agreement was reached. This matter will receive further technical examination in the Monetary Committee.

The Council approved the grant under the Community loan mechanism of a loan of 1.75 Becu to Greece. The loan, which is subject to a number of detailed conditions, will be made available in two equal instalments. The second instalment, which will not be payable before 1 January 1987, would be made in the light of examination of the performance of the Greek economy.

There was a further discussion of the Commission's annual economic report and also of the Commission's views on indirect tax harmonisation.

The Council agreed in principle to raise the ceiling on the issue of Euratom loans to 3 Becu.

Following the lifting of a Danish reserve, the Council adopted the Directives establishing common rules for unit trusts and other undertakings for collective investment in financial securities (UCITS).

Manufactured Goods

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give the balance of trade in manufactured goods for 1979 and 1984.

Mr. MacGregor: The balance of trade in manufactured goods was in surplus by £2,698 million in 1979 and in deficit by £3,786 million in 1984. In contrast, the current account as a whole was in deficit by £736 million in 1979 and in surplus by £935 million in 1984.

European Community

Mr. Foulkes asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of net contributions to the European Economic Community in each of the coming three years.

Mr. Brooke: The latest estimate of the United Kingdom's net payments to European Community institutions for the coming three financial years was published in the Autumn Statement and laid before the House on 12 November.

Taxation

Mr. Best asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will introduce legislation to provide for a system of self-assessment for personal taxation.

Mr. Moore: Self-assessment will be among the matters to be discussed in the Green Paper on the reform of personal taxation, along with other possible longer-term developments.

Glass and Glazing Industry (VAT)

Mr. Holt asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many representations he has received from the glass and glazing industry over the imposition of value added tax.

Mr. Brooke: Very few since my hon. Friend's previous question on 27 June.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Technology Transfer

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he proposes to continue to impose on United Kingdom companies the terms of the 1962 NATO agreements on technology transfer; and if he will give an estimate of the effect of this agreement on United Kingdom high technology exports in 1982, 1983 and 1984.

Mr. Channon: I am not aware of any such agreement.

Post Office (Bradford)

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if, when he next meets the chairman of the Post Office, he will raise with him the exclusion of Bradford from the dedicated inter-city service operated by the Post Office and the implications of the withdrawal of Bradford/Kings Cross train services for evening post collection times in Bradford; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Pattie: No, this is a matter for the Post Office Board.

Bankers' Guarantee Scheme

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish in the Official Report a breakdown for each of the last three financial years of the percentages of comprehensive bankers' guarantee scheme policy-holders with facility values of (a) up to £0·5 million, (b) £0·5 to £1 million and (c) over £1 million and the percentages of total claims paid under the scheme for each of these categories.

Mr. Channon: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

DEFENCE

Empty Houses

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the number of empty houses in his Department's ownership; and if he will list them by local authority.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The numbers of vacant service and civilian houses at the end of July 1985 were:

	Number
Service	14,235
Civilian	397

These figures cannot be broken down by local authority without disproportionate effort. However, details are available of service vacancies by standard economic region:

Service Personnel (Postings)

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what is the current posting of SAC Geoffrey Jones;

(2) what is the current posting of SAC Christopher Payne;

(3) what is the current posting of SAC Alan Lightowler;

(4) what is the current posting of SAC Wayne Kriehn;

(5) what is the current posting of SAC Gwynfor Owen.

Mr. Stanley: It is not the usual practice to publish details of the movements of individual service men in the course of their duties; however, in this instance, I can say that the current posting of these service men is RAF, West Drayton.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current posting of Signalman David Hardman.

Mr. Stanley: Former Signalman David Hardman gave notice in October 1983 that he wished to leave the Army on completion of nine years service, and was acccordingly discharged in October 1984.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what is the current posting of Lance-corporal Anthony Glass;

(2) what is the current posting of Signalman Martin Tuffy.

Mr. Stanley: It is not the usual practice to publish details of the movements of individual service men in the course of their duties; however, in this instance, I can say that the current posting of these service men is a signal regiment in the United Kingdom.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current posting of SAC Paul Davies.

Mr. Stanley: Former SAC Paul Davies was discharged from the RAF in October 1984.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether any of the eight members of 9 Signals Regiment, recently acquitted on spying charges, have expressed a desire to leave the service.

Mr. Stanley: Notices requesting discharge were received from former Signalman David Hardman in October 1983 and Signalman Martin Tuffy in February 1985.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) whether the eight members of 9 Signals Regiment, recently acquitted on spying charges, will be permitted to remain in 9 Signals Regiment;

(2) if the members of 9 Signals Regiment recently acquitted on spying charges have been allocated comparable tasks to those they undertook before their arrest.

Mr. Stanley: Former Signalman David Hardman, Signalman Martin Tuffy, Lance Corporal Anthony Glass and SAC Christopher Payne have either left the armed forces already or will do so shortly on completion of their engagements.

The next steps for SAC Alan Lightowler, SAC Wayne Kriehn, SAC Gwynfor Owen and SAC Geoffrey Jones are under consideration.

Brigade of Gurkhas

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with the Nepalese Government concerning the Brigade of Gurkhas.

Mr. Stanley: Her Majesty's Government maintain close and regular contact with the Government of Nepal on matters concerning the Brigade of Gurkhas. My noble Friend the Minister of State for Defence visited Nepal between 25 and 31 October.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many battalions of the Gurkhas he plans to disband;

(2) if he plans to make a statement concerning the planned strength of the Gurkhas when Hong Kong is returned to the People's Republic of China.

Mr. Stanley: I cannot add to the Ministry of Defence news release of 27 September headed "Hong Kong Stability Permits Force Reductions", a copy of which is in the Library.

Tornado Aircraft

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current cost of a Tornado ADV Mk 2.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The estimated cost for the Tornado Mk 2 air defence variant is £17 million at 1984-85 average outturn prices.

Lieutenant-Colonel Boyle

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current posting of Lt.-Col. Boyle, Royal Signals.

Mr. Stanley: The Ministry of Defence.

Royal Air Force (Training)

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current cost of training a fast jet pilot for the Royal Air Force.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The average cost to the Ministry of Defence of training a student pilot to the point when he joins an operational fast jet squadron is approximately £2·87 million (at 1984-85 prices).

St. Helena

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether his Department is involved in any discussion about the construction of an airfield on St. Helena.

Mr. Stanley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Minister for Overseas Development to the hon. Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell) on 11 November, at column 39. The proposal to construct an airfield on St. Helena has been discussed with my Department, which has confirmed that there is no military requirement for one.

Dockyards

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will list the number of people employed at Devonport dockyard from 1970 to 1985 as (a) Royal Naval personnel and (b) industrial civil servants;

(2) if he will list the number of people employed at Portsmouth dockyard since 1970 as (a) Royal Naval personnel and (b) industrial civil servants;

(3) if he will list the number of people employed at Rosyth dockyard for each year from 1970 to 1985; (a) Royal Naval personnel and (b) industrial civil servants.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The number of (a) Royal Naval personnel and (b) industrial civil servants employed at Rosyth, Devonport and Portsmouth dockyards as at 1 April in each of the years in question was:

Year	Portsmouth		Devonport		Rosyth
	(a)	(b)	(a)	(b)	(a)	(b)

School Governing Bodies

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he will issue guidelines to local education authorities regarding the role of head teachers in the election of teaching and non-teaching staff representatives on school governing bodies; what representations he has received on this subject; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he has any plans to issue guidance to local education authorities concerning the procedures for the election and appointment of governors and representatives to school governing bodies.

Mr. Dunn: A few representations have been received requesting the issue of general guidance on the procedures for elections of parent and teacher governors, but none specifically on the role of the headteacher in such matters. Under section 2(9) of the Education Act 1980, the necesary arrangements for the election of governors are left for local decision by the local education authority or, in the case of an aided or special agreement school, the governing body, always provided that any contested election is by secret ballot. In view of the wide variety of local circumstances, the Government continue to believe that these matters are best determined locally and has no plans to issue guidance on procedures.

Lindop Inquiry

Mr. Richard Shepherd asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether the Lindop inquiry had available to it copies of both Price Waterhouse reports on the Council for National Academic Awards before reaching its conclusions.

Mr. Walden: The Price Waterhouse reports were commissioned by the Council for National Academic Awards for its own internal management purposes and I understand that the Lindop committee therefore did not ask to see them.

Primary Teachers

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations has he received concerning the criteria for Bachelor of Education courses as set out on circular 3/84 as it applies to the training of primary teachers; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: My right hon. Friend has received two letters on criteria which apply only to the training of primary teachers through undergraduate courses. He has also received letters on criteria which apply equally to other courses of initial teacher training. The criteria set out in the annex to circular 3/84 are based on the requirements published in the White Paper "Teaching Quality" (Cmnd. 8836) and recommendations made to my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Education and Science and for Wales by the Advisory Committee on the Supply and Education of Teachers.

Member's Correspondence

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when the hon. Member for Rugby and Kenilworth may receive a reply to his letter dated 26 September relating to appraisal plans and policy on replacement of teachers by advisers.

Mr. Chris Patten: I replied to my hon. Friend on 16 November on behalf of my right hon. Friend.

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when the hon. Member for Rugby and Kenilworth may expect a reply to his letter of 17 September about teachers' salaries.

Mr. Chris Patten: I replied to my hon. Friend on 16 November on behalf of my right hon. Friend.

ENVIRONMENT

Waste Disposal

Mr. Sumberg asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what use he intends to make of his powers under section 10 of the Local Government Act 1985 to establish single authorities for waste regulation and disposal where he considers that there would be advantage in joint arrangements between boroughs or districts but no satisfactory arrangements were made before 15 November.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many voluntary groupings of boroughs had been established to deal with operational waste disposal in Greater London by the deadline in the Act of 15 November 1985; how many statutory groupings he will need to establish in Greater London; and when the total post-abolition waste regulation and disposal situation in Greater London will be known.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I have carefully considered whether there would be advantage in joint arrangements for the discharge of waste regulation and disposal functions between London borough councils and between district councils in each of the six metropolitan areas. I have concluded that in each area, there would be advantage in certain joint arrangements.

I am glad to report that satisfactory voluntary agreements have been concluded covering all waste disposal functions between district councils in Tyne and Wear, the west midlands, South Yorkshire and West Yorkshire. I very much welcome the hard work which these authorities have put into reaching agreement on these arrangements by the statutory deadline.

In Merseyside, I am of the view that there is advantage in joint arrangements for all waste disposal functions to cover the five district councils, and I intend to lay an order setting up a single authority for this purpose. Both Sefton and Wirral proposed to discharge these functions independently. However, I am satisfied that the need for adequate control of hazardous waste and the existing links with the rest of the county on operations are such as to rule this out. If the situation were to change, for example by the conclusion of a satisfactory agreement with a neighbouring county council, I should be prepared to consider an amending order to exclude either district from the new authority in due course.

In Greater Manchester, I have concluded that there would be advantage in joint arrangements to cover all ten district councils for regulatory functions. For operational functions, Bolton and Wigan borough councils have both proposed that they should be independent. I have concluded that the present pattern of waste disposal in Greater Manchester is such that there needs to continue to be a single organisation to manage it for all the districts except Bolton and Wigan. I have also concluded that Bolton should form part of this organisation, since the present county council landfill site at Red Moss, Horwich in Bolton, and its proposed extension, play a significant part in the plans of the county council and it would be to the overall advantage of these districts that they should participate in the decision on them. If the decision should subsequently be not to proceed with development of the Red Moss site, I would be prepared to re-consider Bolton's inclusion.

I have also concluded that, because Wigan borough council's operational links with the rest of Greater Manchester are not significant, and because they have the ability to provide sufficient disposal capacity for their own needs within their own area at least into the next decade, there would be no advantage in joint arrangements for this council. I therefore propose to lay an order setting up a single authority for all waste regulation and disposal functions in Greater Manchester, except operational functions in Wigan.

In London, I have concluded that joint arrangements are necessary to deal with the regulation of hazardous waste over the whole of Greater London. No joint arrangements have been made, and I therefore intend to establish a single authority for the whole London area for hazardous waste. As it will not be possible to treat the licensing under the Control of Pollution Act 1974 of hazardous waste disposal sites separately from the licensing of other sites, this authority will be responsible for the licensing of all waste disposal sites in London. The individual London boroughs will, of course, retain their development control planning powers.

I have considered the arguments which have been advanced for and against a single London-wide authority for operational purposes as well, and also those for a single authority for the whole area excluding the boroughs of Bromley, Croydon, Kingston-upon-Thames, Merton and Sutton. The Local Government Act 1985 is based on the principle that, so far as possible, services should be devolved to lower-tier authorities. Whilst I recognise the need for joint arrangements between certain authorities in London, I have concluded that, for operational purposes, the balance of advantage does not lie in a single authority or an authority covering all but five boroughs, as compared with the seven groupings of boroughs outlined in my Department's consultation document of 23 July. In consequence, I have to consider whether joint arrangements that have been made on that basis are satisfactory.

I am pleased to say that satisfactory agreements have been concluded for joint arrangements between the London boroughs of Bromley, Croydon, Kingston-upon-Thames, Merton and Sutton ('group 1'); and between the City of London, the city of Westminster and the London borough of Tower Hamlets ('group 6'). The London borough of Tower Hamlets has undertaken in this agreement to redevelop the Northumberland wharf refuse transfer station for the river-borne disposal of waste. I very much welcome this decision, which has the environmental advantage of ensuring that more of London's waste will be carried by river. It must, however, be for Tower Hamlets to decide the exact nature of the redevelopment it wishes to undertake at Northumberland wharf. I have therefore decided that it would be an undue restraint on the discretion of the successor authority if the present proposed scheme were to commence before the London borough of Tower Hamlets has decided what it will in future want. A letter has therefore today been sent to the Greater London council withholding consent to the contract for the proposed scheme under the terms of section 9 of the Local Government (Interim Provisions) Act 1984.

A joint agreement has also been made between the London boroughs of Greenwich, Lewisham and Southwark ('group 2'). I take the view that there would be advantage in joint arrangements which included the London borough of Bexley as well as these three boroughs in order to fulfil the terms of the contract which serves Bexley, Greenwich and Lewisham and to ensure adequate future waste disposal arrangements. The existing agreement is not, therefore, satisfactory. I intend to establish a single authority for operational functions covering all four boroughs. If, however, agreements were made which effectively dealt with these two questions, I would be prepared to consider an amending order.

Elsewhere in London, no satisfactory voluntary joint arrangements have been made for the discharge of operational functions. In the light of the considerations set out in my Department's consultation document of 23 July and the representations I have subsequently received, I intend to establish four authorities for this purpose, covering: (i) the London boroughs of Brent, Ealing, Harrow, Hillingdon, Hounslow and Richmond-upon-Thames; (ii) the London boroughs of Barnet, Camden, Enfield, Hackney, Haringey, Islington, and Waltham Forest; (iii) the London boroughs of Barking and Dagenham, Havering, Newham and Redbridge; and (iv) the London boroughs of Hammersmith and Fulham, Kensington and Chelsea, Lambeth and Wandsworth. There will need to be certain transitional arrangements between some of these groups, and the order will provide accordingly. The five statutory authorities for operational purposes in London will be responsible for the disposal of waste from civic amenity sites; the running of the sites themselves will, however, become the responsibility of the borough councils throughout London.

I intend to make all the necessary orders to give effect to these decisions as soon as possible, so that the new authorities can be established on 1 January 1986. In the meantime, I urge all the constituent authorities concerned to make every effort to prepare the ground for the work of the new authorities. My Department will shortly be issuing guidance to assist the constituent authorities in this process.

Inner City Land (Leeds)

Dr. Hampson asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will exercise his powers under section 99 of the Local Government, Land and Planning Act 1980, to direct the Leeds city council to sell the surplus inner city land in their ownership.

Sir George Young: On 19 November 1985, my right hon. Friend directed Leeds city council to take steps to dispose of its interest in 11 sites from the register of unused or underused land compiled by him under the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980. The directions were made under section 98 of the Act. A list of all the 21 sites where directions were issued on 19 November has been placed in the Library.

Multiple Occupation

Mr. Knox asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he plans to take to draw the attention of local authorities to the consolidation of their powers in respect of houses in multiple occupation in the Housing Act 1985; and if he plans to give any assistance to authorities to make fuller use of these powers.

Sir George Young: My right hon. Friend proposes to consult the local authority associations and other interested organisations shortly about a draft circular on houses in multiple occupation. The draft circular will be accompanied by a draft memorandum which will draw attention to local authorities' wide ranging powers for securing improved conditions in this type of accommodation. Subject to these consultations, my right hon. Friend hopes to publish the circular and memorandum shortly after the Housing Act 1985 comes into force on 1 April 1986. The consolidated Act and the new circular will be helpful to local authorities in the use of their powers.

Mr. Knox asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the progress of his research project on houses in multiple occupation; when he will publish the report of the first stage of the project on the postal survey of local authorities; if he will list the local authorities in which the physical survey of houses in multiple occupation is being conducted; and when he intends to publish the report on the second stage of the project.

Sir George Young: The first part of the research project, a postal survey of all local authorities in England and Wales, has been completed. My Department is studying the contractor's report. My right hon. Friend hopes to announce a summary of the results early in the new year and to publish a detailed account shortly afterwards. The second part of the research, also completed, was a pilot physical and social survey in the London borough of Hammersmith and Fulham, the city of Birmingham and the city of Gloucester. This was a feasibility study to consider the scope for a full scale study and the results will not be published. The full physical and social survey of 550 HMOs is being carried out in the following areas:

Bristol city council
Bolton metropolitan borough council
Calderdale metropolitan borough council
Cardiff city council
Colchester borough council
Derby city council
Ealing borough council
Eastbourne borough council
Harrow borough council
Kensington and Chelsea borough council
Kingston upon Hull city council
Leicester city council

Lewisham borough council
Peterborough city council
Plymouth city council
Salisbury district council
Sandwell metropolitan borough council
Wakefield metropolitan borough council
Wirral metropolitan borough council
York city council

This third stage will be completed in the summer of 1986 and the result will be published in the winter of 1986-87.

Local Authority Staff

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what specific statutory rules he proposes to introduce in respect of selection procedures adopted by local councils when making new staff appointments.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer to the reply my right hon. Friend gave on 15 November to my hon. Friend the Member for Nuneaton (Mr. Stevens) at column 31.

Dangerous Wild Animals Act 1976

Mr. Greg Knight asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many district councils in England and Wales have issued licences under the Dangerous Wild Animals Act 1976; if he will list the names thereof; and what information he has as to the fees charged by each local authority.

Mr. Waldegrave: Local authorities are responsible for granting licences under the Dangerous Wild Animals Act 1976 and are required to charge such fees as are necessary to cover their costs. No central record is kept of the number of licences issued and fees charged.

Asbestos (Licensed Tips)

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the tips in southern England which are licensed to take asbestos.

Mrs. Rumbold: Details of sites as at March 1984 can be obtained from the Hazardous Waste Inspectorate's register of facilities for the disposal of controlled wastes in England and Wales. A copy is available in the Library.

Wirral Metropolitan Council

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many people were employed by the Wirral metropolitan council in 1979 and at the latest available date, respectively.

Mrs. Rumbold: The total number of staff, full-time plus part-time employed by Wirral metropolitan district council was 15,318 in June 1979 and 14,308 in June 1985.

Special Protection Areas

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he received from the Nature Conservancy Council the relevant details required to list a special protection area under directive 79/409, of the Wash (Norfolk-Lincs); and when this site will be listed with the European Commission.

Mrs. Rumbold: Proposals for designation of a number of areas, including the Wash (north Norfolk and Lincolnshire coast), as special protection areas under the EC Directive 79/409 were submitted to this Department by the Nature Conservancy Council in March 1984. The majority of these sites have since been designated following consultation with other Government Departments and interested bodies. Consultations on the Wash are not yet complete.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment which sites recognised by the Nature Conservancy Council as being of sufficient importance to merit listing as a special protection area under directive 79/409 are currently threatened by development proposals or approved developments; and if this information has been registered with the European Commission.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Nature Conservancy Council has identified 149 sites in Great Britain which merit designation as special protection areas under EC Directive 79/409 on the conservation of wild birds. The council is aware of development proposals or approved developments on 8 of these sites:

Caenlochan, Grampian and Tayside
Drumochter Hills, Highland
Firth of Forth, Central Lothian and Fife
Islay, Strathclyde
Loch Kenn and Dee Marshes, Dumfries and Galloway
Teesmouth Flats and Marshes, Durham
Humber Flats and Marshes, Humberside
Stour/Orwell estuary, estuary

The Government are not required to register this information with the EC Commission.

Water Authorities

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing (a) for each water authority in England in cash and real terms since 1979, taking that as the base year (i) the water rate, (ii) the percentage change in water rate, (iii) capital expenditure and (iv) the percentage change in capital expenditure and (b) for all local water authorities in England in cash and real terms since 1979, taking that as the base year (1) the average water rate and percentage change and (2) the total capital expenditure and percentage change.

Mr. John Patten: The information requested by the hon. Member is as follows:

Prefabricated Concrete Houses

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to when the repair systems for prefabricated concrete houses will be approved and licensed by PRC Homes Ltd.; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: I am pleased to report that PRC Homes Ltd. has now approved and licensed the first two repair systems for prefabricated reinforced concrete houses. Both systems are for the Cornish Unit type and were submitted by W. G. Curtin and Partners and John Laing Construction Ltd. respectively. I understand from PRC Homes Ltd. that 11 further systems (for Airey, Cornish Unit, Unity, Reema and Woolaway houses) are currently being appraised; that a further five (for Airey, Reema, Unity and Woolaway) have been received by PRC Homes Ltd. for assessment and that a further 33 systems are currently being prepared by builders and designers, for submission to PRC Homes Ltd. These are expected to cover Airey, Boot, Cornish Unit, Orlit. Parkinson, Stent, Tarran, Unity, Wates and Woolaway house types.

This represents considerable progress: we can therefore anticipate several more approvals emerging in the near future. It is, of course, good news for PRC home owners who are looking forward to having their homes repaired, with grant assistance from their local authorities, under the provisions of the Housing Defects Act 1984.

Canary Wharf

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to when the London Docklands Development Corporation will have concluded the master building agreement with Credit Suisse First Boston concerning the scheme for Canary wharf.

Sir George Young: Negotiations are continuing between LDDC and the American consortium, and I understand that they aim to conclude the master building agreement in early 1986.

River Quality Surveys

Mr. Knowles asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he is making for river quality surveys.

Mr. Waldegrave: I am pleased to announce that, with my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland, I am arranging for information on the qualities of rivers, canals and estuaries in England, Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland in 1985 to be assembled and published in 1986. These surveys will, in conjunction with earlier ones, allow an assessment of the progress being made by our authorities in the protection and improvement of the water environment.

World Heritage List

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what nominations he has in mind to put forward for the world heritage list; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: My noble Friend the Minister of State made an announcement today in another place on this subject.

The World Heritage convention, to which the United Kingdom ratified last year, provides for the protection of cultural and natural properties of outstanding universal value, in part by the drawing up of a world heritage list. The Government are anxious that the United Kingdom and the Dependent Territories should be fully and properly represented in the list. To secure an entry sites should first be included in the so-called "tentative list" which gives advance warning of nominations likely to come forward in the next few years. The second stage is the submission of fully-documented nominations to the world heritage committee. If the nominations are approved, the sites are then entered on the world heritage list.

The tentative list of sites that the United Kingdom is putting forward is as follows:

I. CULTURAL PROPERTIES

A. Monuments

i. Dark Age and Medieval

1. St. Patrick's isle (Isle of Man)
2. Canterbury cathedral
3. Tower of London
4. Durham cathedral and castle
5. Fountains Abbey and St. Mary's, Studley Royal
6. St. David's Close and Bishop's palace
7. Historic Cambridge colleges

ii. Post-medieval

8. Chatsworth
9. Blenheim Palace
10. Stourhead
11. Menai and Conwy suspension bridges
12. The Palace of Westminster
13. SS Great Britain and Western Docks, Bristol

B. Groups of Buildings

14. Ecclesiastical sites of Lough Erne
15. The castles and town walls of King Edward I in Gwynedd
16. Lacock
17. Bath
18. Edinburgh Old and New towns
19. New Lanark
20. Cregneash (Isle of Man)
21. Ironbridge gorge
22. Gibraltar defences

C. Sites

23. Stonehenge, Avebury and associated sites
24. Mainland Orkney
25. Navan fort
26. Caerleon Legionary fortress
27. Hadrian's Wall military zone

II. NATURAL PROPERTIES

28. St. Kilda
29. Giant's Causeway and Causeway coast
30. Lake District national park
31. The Wash and North Norfolk coast
32. The British Virgin Islands: Anegada
33. The British Virgin Islands: The Baths area of Virgin Gorda
34. St. Helena: Diana's Peak and High Peak
35. Henderson Island, Pitcairn Group
36. Gough Island, Tristan da Cunha

The United Kingdom proposes to put forward the following substantive nominations this year:

Durham Cathedral and Castle
Fountains Abbey and St. Mary's Studley Royal
The castles and town walls of King Edward I in Gwynedd
Ironbridge Gorge
Stonehenge, Avebury and associated sites
St. Kilda
Giant's Causeway and Causeway coast

NORTHERN IRELAND

Short Brothers plc

Mr. Moynihan asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about funding to Short Brothers plc for the year ending 31 March 1986.

Mr. Tom King: Following consideration of Shorts' 1984 corporate plan update, the Government have authorised an external funding limit of £16 million covering the period 1 April 1985 to 31 March 1986. As their contribution to this funding the Government have agreed to provide up to £6·44 million largely by means of payment under a repayable launch-aid contract and normal grants in respect of product development undertaken by the company. The balance of the £16 million will be raised by the company through commercial borrowings. The agreed funding level will enable Shorts to continue development of the three parts of its business—aircraft, aerostructures and guided missiles.

Motorway Lighting

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many miles of motorway in Northern Ireland are currently lit; if he will break them down by motorway; how many miles of motorway are planned to be lit; of those miles lit, in the case of how many the lights were installed during construction of the motorway itself; and in how many cases the lighting was installed separately after construction of the motorway itself; and what mileage was involved.

Mr. Needham: There are 6 miles of motorway in Northern Ireland currently lit: 1 mile on the M1, 3¼ miles on the M2 and 1¾ miles on the M5. It is not planned to light further stretches of motorway. In the case of those miles of motorway lit, 4¾ miles were lit at the time of construction, and in three cases a total of 1¾ miles of motorway were lit after construction.

Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Conference

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what will be the respective proportionate contributions towards the costs of operation of the secretariat of the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Conference by the two Governments involved;

(2) if Her Majesty's Government expect any financial support from the Government of the United States of America to be available for Northern Ireland in the context of the proposed Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Conference; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what will be the postal address of the proposed secretariat of the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Conference;

(4) where is the location of the proposed secretariat of the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Conference;

(5) if the proposed Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Conference will have authority to discuss United Kingdom and Western Alliance defence installations with Northern Ireland.

Mr. Tom King: I shall reply to the right hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Pirate Radio Station Laser 558

Mr. Evennett asked the Attorney-General whether the Director of Public Prosecutions intends to institute proceedings against any person under the Marine &c. Broadcasting (Offences) Act 1967 for (a) supply of food and provisions and (b) procuring advertising for the pirate radio station Laser 558; and if he will make a statement.

The Solicitor-General: Proceedings have already been commenced against one person for supply of food and provisions to Radio Laser. Inquiries are still continuing in respect of persons suspected of procuring advertising for Radio Laser. When the results of those inquiries are known I shall write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Evennett asked the Attorney-General whether the Director of Public Prosecutions intends to institute proceedings under the Marine &c. Broadcasting (Offences) Act 1967 against those persons who operated the pirate radio station Laser 558; and if he will make a statement.

The Solicitor-General: Inquiries are being made in respect of certain persons involved in the operation of Radio Laser, and if sufficient evidence becomes available the Director of Public Prosecutions will institute proceedings. When the results of this inquiry are known I shall write to the hon. Member.

Ms. Adebola Makenjuola

Mr. Cohen asked the Attorney-General when the Director of Public Prosecutions expects to decide whether to prosecute the police officer alleged by Ms. Adebola Makenjuola to have committed a serious sexual assault on her; and if he will make a statement.

The Solicitor-General: The Director of Public Prosecutions has received a police report in this matter, which is presently under consideration.

Deportation Files (Access)

Mr. Cohen asked the Attorney-General what arrangements operate for the logging of those who have access to (a) computer and (b) manual files kept on individuals by his Department and the Lord Chancellor's Department; and if he will describe the procedures in operation for both categories.

The Solicitor-General: Specific guidelines on security of automatically processed data in Government Departments are observed. They are contained in "Protection of information in computer systems" and "Central Government Code of Practice No. 21", issued by the Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency, which give recommended procedures to safeguard data in computer installations. Copies of the guidelines have been placed in the House Library.

Manual files containing personal information held in the Law Officers' Department or in the Lord Chancellor's Department are available only to members of the respective Department's staff who need to see them. The precise arrangements vary according to the type and location of the file. In the Law Officers' Department the identity of the members of the staff to whom the file has been passed is ascertainable from records in the Department's registry or from the file itself. In the Lord Chancellor's Department the issue of a file is always recorded in writing.

Heysel Stadium Incident (Prosecutions)

Mr. Alton asked the Attorney-General, pursuant to the reply of the Solicitor-General to the hon. Member for Liverpool, Mossley Hill, of Friday 8 November, Official Report, column 293, when he now expects to take a decision on whether to prosecute the 29 British subjects interviewed by Merseyside police in connection with the riot at Heysel stadium.

The Solicitor-General: No final decision will be taken by the Director of Public Prosecutions as to proceedings in this country until such time as the Belgian authorities have decided whether to request the extradition of any British subjects.

TRANSPORT

Mhairi L (Loss)

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he has now received the report of the inquiry into the loss of the Mhairi L; when he expects it to be published; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: Yes, the report has now been received and studied. It is not the practice to publish reports of this kind, but the facts will shortly be made available to interested parties.

Roads (Expenditure)

Mr. Ron Brown asked the Secretary of State for Transport what was the total expenditure on roads during the financial year 1984-85.

Mrs. Chalker: The figures for roads in England are as follows:

Expenditure 1984-85

	Cash £m
Motorways and trunk roads	806
Local authority roads	*1,409
Total roads	2,215

* Provisional

Motorways

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is his Department's assessment of the efficacy of current speed limits on motorways in relation to (a) cars, (b) coaches and (c) heavy goods vehicles; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: I am satisfied that the current speed limits are set at appropriate levels. The extent to which drivers comply with the limits was published in the 1983 and 1984 speed surveys and are available in the Library. I announced to the House on 15 November measures for the compulsory fitting of speed governors to coaches to ensure compliance with the speed limit.

Although motorways are our safest roads, safety must ultimately depend on the general standards of behaviour by all road users, of which compliance with the speed limits is only one part.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many miles of motorway in England are currently lit; if he will break them down by motorway; how many miles of motorway are planned to be lit; of those miles lit, in the case of how many the lights were installed during construction of the motorway itself; in how many cases the lighting was installed separately after construction of the motorway itself; and what mileage was involved.

Mrs. Chalker: The trunk road motorway lighting information requested is as follows:

Motor way	Length with lighting miles	Installed during construction miles	Installed after construction miles
M1	68·0	5·0	63·0
M3	2·0	1·0	1·0
M4	26·3	3·8	22·5

M621	2·2	—	2·2
Total	376·5	195·5	181·0

I am keeping the extent of motorway lighting under review, and at the moment approximately a further 45 miles are planned.

Titford Viaduct

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for Transport what make, model and year are the 12 vehicles referred to in the reply of 15 November, Official Report, columns 331-32; and what happens to them at the end of the contract.

Mrs. Chalker: The 12 vehicles provided for the use of the engineer's site staff are:

10—Peugeot 205's all B reg. (1984-85)
1—Austin Montego Estate C reg. (1985)
1—VW LT31 van B reg. (1984-85)

The future use of these vehicles after completion of the contract is a matter for the contractor.

London Regional Transport

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport if any complaints have been received by the traffic commissioner for the metropolitan area regarding licensed persons driving tendered bus services for London Regional Transport; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: I understand that the metropolitan traffic commissioners have no record of any such complaints.

Channel Link

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Transport what are the criteria of assessment of the standards required in preventing the spread of rabies in the consideration of proposals for a fixed Channel link.

Mr. David Mitchell: The requirement that promoters of a Channel fixed link must satisfy in respect of preventing the spread of rabies are laid down in paragraph 44 of the "Invitation to Promoters", issued by the British and French Governments on 2 April, a copy of which was placed in the Library.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Transport what recent assessment he has made of the infrastructure investment which will be required to be made from public funds in respect of the Channel link proposals; and if he will make a statement on the likely cost.

Mr. David Mitchell: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the member for Christchurch (Mr. Adley) on 11 November, at column 83.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the procedures through which members of the public and interested bodies should make known their views on the various proposals for fixed links across the Channel.

Mr. David Mitchell: My right hon. Friend has advertised widely inviting public comment on the four schemes that we are considering. Any views received will be taken into account before a decision is reached. Additionally, members of the public can write to their MPs, who in due course will be asked to consider a Bill embodying any decision the French and British Governments may make.

Bus Grants

Mr. Robert Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the estimated financial savings, in each relevant financial year, of the phasing out of new bus grants.

Mr. Ridley: When the last Administration decided to phase out new bus grants in 1977, the annual cost was £43 million. It is impossible to say how many buses would have been brought into service had the grant rate remained at 50 per cent., and the saving from phasing out the grant cannot therefore be reliably estimated.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Visas

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which Commonwealth and other foreign countries whose citizens enter the United Kingdom without visas, require visas to be obtained by United Kingdom citizens entering their territory.

Mr. Eggar: The information is as follows:

Commonwealth countries	Foreign countries
Australia	Guatemala
Bangladesh	USA
Ghana	Venezuela
India
Maldives (issued on arrival)
Nauru (issued on arrival)
Nigeria
Sierra Leone

The table relates only to British citizens seeking entry for a temporary stay. For settlement, regulations differ from country to country. All Commonwealth and foreign nationals (other than from the European Community) require prior entry clearance if they wish to settle in the United Kingdom.

PRIME MINISTER

Miss Sarah Keays

Q24. Mr. Dalyell asked the Prime Minister on what date, and at what hour, staff at 10 Downing street were informed about the burglary at Miss Sarah Keays' sister's house in Battersea in November 1983.

Mr. Biffen: I have been asked to reply.

The burglary in question was dealt with entirely by the police, who saw no reason, either at the time or subsequently, to inform my right hon. Friend's staff about it.

Crime (Causation Factors)

Q56. Mr. Ewing asked the Prime Minister to what extent she attributes the causes of the increase in crime since 1979 to youth unemployment and bad housing; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Biffen: I have been asked to reply.

Extensive research has not yielded a clear or significant link between levels of unemployment and recorded crime. Other studies have shown that certain kinds of housing estates are particularly prone to crime and vandalism, but there is no evidence to suggest that poor physical conditions in themselves contribute to criminality.

Mr. Greenway asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 21 November.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 21 November.

Mr. Pike asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 21 November.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Prime Minister if she will list her engagements for Thursday 21 November.

Mr. Baldry asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 21 November.

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 21 November.

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 21 November.

Mr. Leigh asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 21 November.

Mr. Biffen: I have been asked to reply.

This morning my right hon. Friend presided at a meeting of the Cabinet, and is now in Brussels for President Reagan's briefing of the NATO Council.

Rainbow Warrior

Mr. Wigley asked the Prime Minister whether Her Majesty's Government lodged an official protest with the French Government concerning the bombing of the Greenpeace ship Rainbow Warrior in New Zealand.

The Prime Minister: Her Majesty's ambassador in Paris delivered a note to the French Foreign Ministry on 24 September drawing attention to the fact that the Rainbow Warrior was a British ship and urging swift compensation. A similar note was handed to the French ambassador in London on 25 September.

Hillsborough Summit

Mr. Peter Robinson asked the Prime Minister what is her best estimate of the cost of the Hillsborough summit on 15 November including the wages costs of security forces.

The Prime Minister: I shall reply to the hon. Gentleman shortly.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Trials (Tape Recording)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Leicestershire on the tape recording trials undertaken by Leicestershire constabulary; if he will call for reports from other relevant chief constables as to how those trials compare with the other areas of testing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I understand that the tape recording trial in Leicester continues to go well. Police officers have continued to respond positively to the new procedures, and there have been no significant challenges to the authenticity of taped evidence. The early signs that tape recording may lead to an increase in the guilty plea rate have continued in Leicestershire; amongst other benefits, this is likely to reduce the number of occasions on which police officers have to attend court. The tape recording field trials are being monitored by the Home Office research and planning unit, and it will only be when all the tape recorded cases being monitored in the trials have been disposed of by the courts that a complete analysis of the data will be possible. The general picture emerging, however, is that the favourable impression of tape recording being gained from Leicestershire is shared in the other field trial areas.

Sufficient experience has been gained from the field trials already to enable plans to be made to begin the introduction of tape recording on a national basis. Preparations are in hand to start tape recording of interviews in nearly 30 further forces during the course of the coming year. It is our intention in the course of the year to issue a code of practice in connection with the tape recording of interviews.

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what steps he intends to take to improve the methods of recording the results of trial or sentence;

(2) why the number of cases where the result of trial or sentence was not recorded rose from 3,038 in 1979 to 7,683 in 1984; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The outcome of court proceedings is comprehensively recorded for criminal statistics. However, the statistics referred to by the hon. Member, which are from table 2.4 of "Prison Statistics, England and Wales 1984", relate to the outcome of those court proceedings for those remanded in custody. That information is reported by prison department establishments and is always less complete for the most recent year when some cases will not have reached disposal. The latest year's figures will be revised in next year's publication, but the information will remain incomplete because prison department establishments may have difficulty in tracing the outcome of a case.

Prison Workshops

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he intends to take arising from the findings of the recently published report by the National Audit Office on debts and losses incurred in the management of prison workshops.

Mr. Mellor: The remedial measures being taken are described in some detail in the Comptroller and Auditor General's report.* They were announced in broad outline to the House by the then Home Secretary on 31 October 1984, at column 987, and include new machinery for central management of prison industries, a rolling four-year plan to determine future strategy and overall financial targets, and improvements in a range of managerial and financial controls. He also announced on 12 July 1985, at column 560, a review by the Prisons Board of how far prison industries were making a satisfactory contribution to providing worthwhile employment for prison inmates. We shall announce the outcome of this review in due course.

* Appropriation Accounts (volume 6: Class IX, 1984-1985 Report of the Comptroller and Auditor General Class IX Vote 8: Prisons, England and Wales (Home Office).

Metropolitan Police

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the planned effects of the reorganisation of the Metropolitan police on (a) the four area robbery squads, (b) the area intelligence surveillance units, (c) the special patrol group, (d) the district support units, (e) district crime squads and (f) the district juvenile bureaux in relation to their number, location, function and strength.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis tells me that the future roles and organisation of the squads and units mentioned are currently the subject of consultation within the force and, where appropriate, with community representatives. No decisions will be taken until these consultations have been completed.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will provide a breakdown of the current establishment and strength of the Metropolitan police (a) by division, (b) by area and (c) by rank in each division; and if he will identify ranked officers as uniformed or CID;

(2) if he will detail the location of the following specialist units within the Metropolitan police force following reorganisation; the central drugs squad, the anti-terrorist squad, the Metropolitan and City police fraud branch, the diplomatic protection group, the serious crimes squad, the flying squad, the No. 9 district regional crime squad, the criminal intelligence branch, the special branch, A8 central information unit, the central intelligence unit, the national identification bureaux, the public sector corruption index and the Metropolitan police laboratory; if he will give the strength of each branch, squad and unit, indicating officers by rank, uniformed and

CID function; and if he will give figures showing the strength of the civilian support staff allocated to each branch, squad and unit;

(3) how many civilian and uniformed staff are employed in the Metropolitan police public information department, press office and public relations department at the Metropolitan police headquarters; what rank and what grades they hold; how many officers are employed on similar work in each division and area; and if he will provide the total staff costs and force expenditure on public relations and promotional material for each year since 1979;

(4) how many civilians are employed by the Metropolitan police force in each division; if he will give details of the numbers by grade for each division; what is the basic salary for each grade; what are the average earnings for each grade; what is the value of fringe benefits for each grade; and what is the average overtime earned by each grade;

(5) if he will provide a staff breakdown by (a) Department and (b) rank located in the Metropolitan police headquarters and identify them as either uniformed or CID officers.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I shall write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the titles of the branches and squads for which each of the four Metropolitan police departments is now responsible following reorganisation.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis tells me that the branches and units which comprise the four Metropolitan police headquarters departments are as follows:

Parole

Mr. Dickens asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department on what criteria parole is granted to prisoners with convictions involving violence, indecency, rape or neglect towards children; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: Under the provisions of section 60 of the Criminal Justice Act 1967 and section 35 of the Criminal Justice Act 1972, my right hon. Friend may release a prisoner on parole only if recommended to do so by the Parole Board or, in certain classes of cases agreed with the board, by local review committees, but he is not obliged to accept their recommendation. The criteria for selection for parole are set out in appendix I of the Parole Board's report for 1984, a copy of which is in the Library. They take account of the more restricted policy on parole for prisoners with sentences of over five years for offences of violence and drug trafficking announced by the then Home Secretary on 30 November 1983 which my right hon. Friend, too, is now following.

Mr. Dickens asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how members of local parole boards are selected; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The Local Review Committee Rules 1967, as amended by the Local Review Committee (Amendment) Rules 1973, stipulate that local review committees shall consist of the governor of the prison with which the committee is associated and not less than four other members appointed by the Secretary of State; that the committee shall include among its members a probation officer who is not a prison welfare officer, a member of the board of visitors or visiting committee of the prison and two persons neither of whom is a probation officer or a member of that board; and that no member of the committee other than the governor of the prison shall be an officer of the prison. Within these criteria candidates for membership of local review committees are recruited and nominated for appointment by the Secretary of State by prison governors in accordance with guidelines set out in Prison Department circular instruction 58/1983, a copy of which is in the Library.

Electoral Registers

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will announce the scale of costs and availability via electoral registration officers of electoral registers in a computerised form.

Mr. Mellor: Regulations will shortly be laid before Parliament which, if approved, will provide for the supply of electoral registration data on payment of prescribed fees.

Civil Defence

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of costs incurred by local authorities on civil defence are grant-aided by his Department; and whether there is a ceiling on the amount of grant aid that can be made available to an individual local authority.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Local authorities are paid a grant of either 75 per cent or 100 per cent. of approved expenditure; the Civil Defence (Grant) (Amendment) Regulations 1983 specify the items eligible for 100 per cent. grant. Expenditure allocations eligible for civil defence grant are set annually for each county council and the GLC based on estimates of expenditure submitted to the Home Office. These may be adjusted during the course of the year to meet new requirements if grant funds are available.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many letters have been sent out to local authorities by Mr. Eric Alley, civil defence adviser to the Home Office, since 1 October; with which authorities Mr. Alley has engaged in correspondence; and if he will publish the text of all correspondence in the Official Report.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I shall reply as soon as possible.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether letters sent out to local authorities by Mr. Eric Alley, civil defence adviser to the Home Office, are sent with his authorisation; and whether they represent the views of Ministers.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The civil defence adviser, who has my full support, corresponds with local authorities for a variety of reasons and only in exceptional circumstances would a letter require specific authorisation.

Suspended Sentences

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of men given suspended sentences subsequently had them imposed in whole or part in the years 1983 and 1984.

Mr. Mellor: About a quarter of males aged 21 and over given a fully suspended sentence in 1983 or 1984 were subsequently sentenced to immediate custody for breach of the sentence. The available information is published annually in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales" (the latest issue is for 1984 — Cmnd. 9621) and in the supplementary tables. Details of persons given partly or fully suspended sentences of imprisonment are published in the supplementary tables, in vollume 1, table S1.1(A) for magistrates' courts and in voume 2, table S2.1(A) for the Crown court. Details of those dealt with for non-compliance with the terms of suspended sentences are published in tables 7.31 and 7.32 of the command paper for 1984 and discussed on page 143 of the commentary.

Detention Centre and Training

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many young males were sentenced to a period of detention centre, senior and junior, training in the period 1 January 1984 to 30 June 1984, 1 July 1984 to 31 December 1984 and 1 January 1985 to 30 June 1985, respectively;

(2) how many males were sentenced to periods of imprisonment in (a) junior detention centres and (b) senior detention centres during 1984 and the first and second quarters of 1985.

Mr. Mellor: Information on males initially received on sentence into junior and senior detention centres is given in the following table. The available information on males sentenced to detention centres in each calendar year is published annually in "Criminal Statistics England and Wales, Supplementary Tables"; in the issue for 1984 in volume 1, tables S1.1(C) and S1.1(D) for magistrates' courts, and in volume 2, tables S2.1(C) and S2.1(D) for the Crown court.

Child Abuse

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many persons have been convicted in England and Wales of offences involving child abuse in each of the last five years; and if he will break the totals down by offence;

(2) how many persons have been convicted in England and Wales of offences involving the sexual abuse of children in each of the last five years; and if he will break the totals down by offence.

Mr. Mellor: The readily available information is brought together in the following table. For other types of offences of violence and sexual offences, the information collected centrally does not distinguish the age of the victim. Information on those offences marked with an asterisk is published annually in "Criminal Statistics England And Wales, Supplementary Tables, Volume 4" (tables S4.1(A) and S4.1(B) for 1984) which also includes information on cautions for these offences, (tables S4.1(C) and S4.1(D)).

Offenders aged 17 and over found guilty at all courts in England and Wales of certain violence against the person or sexual offences where the victim is known to be or could be aged 16 or under.

ENERGY

Nuclear Industry Radioactive Waste Executive

Mr. Phillip Oppenheim asked the Secretary of State for Energy whether steps have been taken to register the Nuclear Industry Radioactive Waste Executive as a company.

Mr. Goodlad: In the 1982 White Paper on radioactive waste management (Cmnd. 8607) the Government announced their agreement that the component parts of the nuclear industry should, in co-operation, set up a Nuclear Industry Radioactive Waste Executive in order to provide a mechanism by which it could fulfil its responsibilities for nuclear waste disposal. NIREX has been functioning as an administrative entity for some time, and its current annual report is in the Library of the House.

My right hon. Friend has today agreed to the incorporation of NIREX as a company. The shares will be held by the Central Electricity Generating Board, British Nuclear Fuels Limited, the Atomic Energy Authority and the South of Scotland Electricity Board. Given the long-term nature of the company's business, and the Government's interest in continuity, my right hon. Friend is a holder of a special share. Taking account of the Royal Commission on environmental pollution's recommendation that there should be independent directors on the NIREX board, the special share confers the right to appoint two independent directors. These appointments, which my right hon. Friend will make in consultation with the Secretaries of State for the Environment, Scotland and Wales, will be announced in due course.

The nuclear industry has committed itself wholeheartedly to the success of NIREX and this commitment is reflected in a formal shareholders agreement.

I am today making available in the Library of the House the shareholders agreement and attached documentation of the new company.

Hinkley Point B Power Station

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Energy (1) if he will name, list and describe the components and other materials, including liquids and gases, removed from the reactor pressure vessel at Hinkley Point B nuclear power station as a result of the accident on 25 October; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will estimate the approximate volume of water that escaped into the reactor pressure vessel in the accident on 25 October at Hinkley Point B nuclear power station, and what were the times at which this escape of water (a) started and (b) was stopped;

(3) if he will name, list and describe any radioactive substances of any type which were released into the atmosphere as a result of the accident on 25 October at Hinkley Point B nuclear power station, either at the time of the accident or subsequently;

(4) if he will describe how the contaminated water was removed from the reactor pressure vessel at Hinkley Point

B nuclear power station following the accident on 25 October, stating whether it was filtered free of radionucledes as it was removed; and what were the levels of radioactivity of this contaminated water (a) before removal an (b) after removal.

Mr. Goodlad: As my right hon. Friend mentioned in his letter of 15 November to the hon. Member, the boiler tube leak at Hinkley Point B on 25 October was notified to the Nuclear Installations Inspectorate. Investigations subsequently confirmed that several hundred gallons of water entered the reactor gas coolant circuit. The boiler tube has been permanently plugged and the reactor was returned to power on 10 November. The NII, the Radiochemical Inspectorate and MAFF are satisfied that the radioactivity discharge was well within the authorised limits.

I am asking the CEGB to provide the hon. Member with the detailed information which he requests.

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Energy when he expects to reply to the letter dated 29 October from the hon. Member for Yeovil, asking for full details of the accident on 25 October at Hinkley Point B nuclear power station.

Mr. Goodlad: My right hon. Friend replied on 15 November.

NCB Houses

Mr. O'Brien asked the Secretary of State for Energy (1) how many houses owned by the National Coal Board were empty on 20 November;

(2) what is the number of empty houses owned by the National Coal Board area by area.

Mr. David Hunt: This is a matter for the National Coal Board. I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

SOLICITOR-GENERAL FOR SCOTLAND

Departmental Files

Mr. Cohen asked the Solicitor-General for Scotland what arrangements operate for the logging of those who have access to (a) computer and (b) manual files kept on individuals by the Lord Advocate's Department; and if he will describe the procedures in operation for both categories.

The Solicitor-General for Scotland:

a. Computer Files

Specific guidelines on security of automatically processed data in Government Departments are observed. They are contained in "Protection of Information in Computer Systems" and "Central Government Code of Practice No. 21", issued by the Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency, which give recommended procedures to safeguard data in computer installations. Copies of these guidelines have been placed in the House library.

b. Manual Files

Manual files on individual members of staff are open only to the personnel officers responsible for those staff and to other officers with a "specific need to know". Access to information on manual files kept on other individuals is confined to those authorised to have it for the purpose for which it is supplied. All officers are subject to the Official Secrets Acts. No specific access records are kept in respect of these.

WALES

Labour Statistics

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish the unemployment percentage for men and women, respectively, for the Dwyfor area for the most recently available month together with figures for the corresponding month of each of the previous five years.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Rates of unemployment are not calculated for districts, but the numbers of unemployed in Dwyfor were as follows:

	Men	Women
October 1985	1,144	522
October 1984	1,051	498
October 1983*	898	463

* The October 1983 figures are provisional until the new ward-based unemployment series is finalised.

As a result of changes in the unemployment series, comparable figures for earlier years are not available.

Jobcentres (Welsh Language)

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is the policy of his Department in relation to the use of the Welsh language for advertising in the local press by jobcentres in Wales.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: I am informed by the Manpower Services Commission that jobcentres do not normally use paid advertising in the local press but that their policy overall is to use the Welsh language whenever practicable and appropriate in their own and other published material.

Welsh Consultative Committee

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with the Commission for Racial Equality concerning the workings of the Welsh Consultative Committee.

Mr. Mark Robinson: None.

Motorways (Lighting)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many miles of motorway in Wales are currently lit; if he will break them down by motorway; how many miles of motorway are planned to be lit; of those miles lit, in the case of how many the lights were installed during construction of the motorway itself; in how many cases the lighting was installed separately after construction of the motorway itself; and what mileage was involved.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The M4 is the only motorway in Wales. Eighteen miles are lit. Fifteen miles had lighting installed during construction and a further three miles had lighting installed as part of a subsequent road widening. The extent of motorway lighting is being kept under review, but there are no plans at present for further lighting.

Welsh Water Authority

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing, for the Welsh water authority, in cash and real terms, since 1979, taking that as the base year (a) the water rate, (b) the percentage change in water rate, (c) the capital expenditure and (d) the percentage change in capital expenditure.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The information requested for the Welsh water authority is as follows:

1979-80	49·08		49·08
1980-81	60·38	23·0	51·91	5·8

* The average rateable value was increased from £120 to £124 to more accurately reflect the actual average in the Welsh water authority's area.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Birth Statistics

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report the proportion of live births by caesarian section to normal live births for each regional health authority.

Mr. Whitney: The latest available information from the hospital in-patient inquiry (maternity) is shown in the table.

The first column (a) shows the ratio of the number of live births by caesarian section to the number of live births with a spontaneous delivery (that is with no mention of manipulation or instrumentation) in a completely normal case, with no mention of any complication ante- or post-natally.

The second ratio (b) is the number of live births by caesarean section to all live births with a spontaneous delivery, irrespective of mention of any complication.

All live births by forceps, vacuum, breech and with abnormal presentation of head have been excluded from columns (a) and (b).

Column (c) shows the ratio of the number of live births by caesarean section to all live births.

In a multiple birth with at least one birth by caesarean section, all the births are counted as caesarean sections. Births by caesarean section include those done electively, in emergency cases and for other reasons, but none is regarded as a delivery in a completely normal case.

The figures are derived from data on maternal discharges from a one in 10 sample of in-patient records from maternity units of National Health Service (NHS) non-psychiatric hospitals in England, and do not include, therefore, births occurring in private hospitals, at home or elsewhere.

Blood Donors

Mr. Skeet asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many blood donors there are in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Hayhoe: During 1984 over 2,513,000 blood donations were collected in the United Kingdom. Frequency of donation varies. Records of the number of donors are not kept centrally.

Blood Stocks

Mr. Skeet asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps are now taken to seek to ensure that blood stocks are not contaminated with AIDS virus.

Mr. Hayhoe: Since 14 October 1985, all blood donations collected by the National Blood Transfusion Service (NBTS) have been tested for HTLV III antibody.

All untested stocks of blood and blood components have been recalled from hospitals by the NBTS. Where testing and reissue is impracticable, such stocks will not be used for transfusion purposes.

The Department has also revised its warning leaflet, now entitled "AIDS—important information for blood donors", and this is being distributed by the NBTS to all its donors individually. The leaflet re-emphasises that those in AIDS high-risk groups should not donate blood.

Mr. Skeet asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what steps have been taken since Dr. Mark Patterson's convictions in 1984 to seek to ensure that blood taken from donors is not misappropriated;

(2) what quantity of blood is held by the national blood transfusion services central and regional depots; and what steps are now taken to monitor its use.

Mr. Hayhoe: The national blood transfusion service (NBTS) is regionally organised; records are not held centrally of operational stock levels at regional transfusion centres or at hospital blood banks.

In March 1984, guidance was issued to health authorities on improving standards of record keeping and stock control for hospital blood banks. This complemented the existing arrangements within the NBTS itself. The guidance also required health authorities to review regularly the usage of blood within their hospitals to ensure its optimum use.

Issue of this guidance preceded Dr. Patterson's conviction in July 1984, and was intended to counter the weaknesses which this case disclosed.

Illegal Blood Sales

Mr. Skeet asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether steps have been taken to retrieve the estimated profit of £158,000 made by the conspirators on the sale of blood in 1984.

Mr. Hayhoe: No. The health authority concluded that it was unlikely to recover even the costs to them of pursuing the recovery in the courts.

Age Addition

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people are currently in receipt of the age addition; and what is the anticipated increase in eligibility over each of the next 10 years.

Mr. Major: At March 1984 some 1,670,000 people over age 80 in Great Britain were in receipt of age addition.

It is estimated that numbers over the next 10 years will be as follows:

	Number
1985-86	1,710,000
1986-87	1,760,000
1987-88	1,810,000
1988-89	1,870,000
1989-90	1,910,000
1990-91	1,960,000
1991-92	1,990,000
1992-93	2,030,000
1993-94	2,070,000
1994-95	2,100,000

Social Security Tribunals

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list all current vacancies on social security tribunals.

Mr. Major: This is a matter for the president of social security appeal tribunals, His Honour Judge John Byrt, QC, and the hon. Member may care to approach him.

Gillick Case (Costs)

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the total cost to date to his Department of all stages of the legal proceedings involving Gillick v West Norfolk and Wisbech area health authority and the Department of Health and Social Security.

Mr. Hayhoe: I regret that this information is not available.

"Reform of Social Security"

Mr. Ron Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has received representations on the Green Paper "Reform of Social Security" from the Society for the Prevention of Asbestosis and Industrial Diseases; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major: The society wrote to the Department on 12 and 16 September. We have noted its observations and will take full account of them.

Blind Persons

Mr. Freeman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many registered blind people are over state retirement age.

Mr. Newton: Information is not available in the precise form requested. However at 31 March 1982, the latest date for which information — which is collated triennially—is available, the number of registered blind people over 65 years of age in England was 84,852. Further information about the breakdown into age groups can be obtained from the Department's publication 'Registered Blind and Partially Sighted Persons at 31 March 1982 England' a copy of which is available in the Library.

Limited List Prescribing

Sir Eldon Griffiths asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if every doctor under contract with the National Health Service was sent a letter from his Department in advance of the decision to introduce a limited list for National Health Service prescriptions.

Mr. Hayhoe: On 14 December 1984 the Chief Medical Officer wrote to all doctors setting out the Government's proposals to introduce a selected list of drugs and inviting comments on the contents of the provisional list. Once the consultation period was over, the Chief Medical Officer wrote to them again, on 28 February 1985, with details of the proposed final form of the selected list. When the regulations introducing the schedule of products not prescribable under the National Health Serive were laid, doctors received notification of their content, either from a health circular sent to all health authorities or from a family practitioner notice sent to all general medical practitioners.

Ambulance Service (Salary Structure)

Mr. Favell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans he has for a new national salary structure for ambulance men; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: This is a matter for the Ambulance Whitley council. The management side of that council has offered to introduce a salaried structure for ambulance men and women and awaits the trade union side's response.

Nicholas Laboratories

Mr. Watts asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to reach a decision on the appeal by Nicholas Laboratories for Polycrol Gel and Polycrol Forte Gel to become available again on National Health Service prescriptions.

Mr. Hayhoe: The advice of the Advisory Committee on National Health Service Drugs in respect of Polycrol Gel is under consideration and a decision will be made shortly. I understand that no submission has been received by the Committee in respect of Polycrol Forte Gel.

Board and Lodging

Mr. Irving asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many representations his Department has now received opposing the effects on young people of the board and lodgings regulations' time limits.

Mr. Newton: The Department has received a substantial volume of correspondence on the board and lodgings regulations. Our records do not enable us to identify representations on particular aspects of the regulations separately.

Mr. Irving asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what proportion of young people claiming board and lodgings benefit have moved to a different area when their benefit entitlement, under the board and lodgings regulations, expired;

(2) what proportion of young people claiming board and lodgings benefits have remained at the same address but have changed their benefit status to that of householder;

(3) what proportion of young people claiming board and lodgings benefit have returned to their parental home when their benefit entitlement under the board and lodgings regulations expired.

Mr. Newton: A survey of 2,350 claimants in the south east carried out between June and August 1985 showed that some 5 per cent. of the claimants concerned moved to a different local office area (not necessarily to a different board and lodging area). A similar proportion remained at the same address and changed their benefit status to householder, compared with over 28 per cent. who stayed at the same address as non-householders. This study did not identify separately claimants who returned to their parental homes. A much smaller study in Scotland found that about one-third of people who changed their address following reassessment returned to live with parents and a further sixth moved to friends, or other relatives. Most of the rest became householders. Indications from local offices generally support the broad findings of these studies.

Child Benefit

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the number of single mothers who have withdrawn claims for child benefit in each single year since 1979, the number of case papers which have been requested from benefit officers' staff by social security fraud squad officers in each single year since 1979; and if he will list the total number of officers who have been employed by his Department as fraud squad investigators during the same period giving a breakdown of the regions of the country to which they have been assigned.

Mr. Major: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what the saving in public expenditure would be if child benefit was paid at full-rate to people earning up to £100 per week and at half-rate to people earning between £100 and £150 per week and no child benefit when earnings exceed £150 per week.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to the reply, 14 November, 1985, c. 286]: The information is not available as requested. Based on families' gross earnings at the levels quoted, the net saving of child benefit (including one parent benefit) would be about £3 billion. There would be considerable extra administration costs arising from the need to subject the 7 million families receiving child benefit to an incomes test.

Coldeast Hospital, Hampshire

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received about the future of Coldeast hospital, Hampshire.

Mr. Whitney: We have received representations only from the League of Friends of the hospital.

Natural Medicines

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Social Services which organisations his Department calls upon for advice about natural medicines.

Mr. Hayhoe: The Department's main sources of advice are the Committee on the Review of Medicines and the Medicines Commission. In addition we have had helpful contact with professional bodies, trade associations and individual manufacturers of alternative medicines.

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people in his Department have expertise in natural medicines.

Mr. Hayhoe: The professional staff employed in the Department who are concerned with the licensing of medicines comprise doctors, pharmacists and scientists who apply their professional training and skills to questions of safety, efficacy and quality in relation to medicines of all descriptions. Their special expertise lies not in particular forms of treatment but in evaluation of whether the conditions for public sale or supply of medicines, under the provisions of the Medicines Act 1968, are met.

As work on the licensing of alternative medicines increases a number of the Department's doctors, pharmacists and scientists become familiar with the particular problems of alternatve medicines in this licensing context. In addition, our Medicines Act committees include three members with expertise in the pharmacy of plants. These Committees are also able to call on additional advice from expert sources as necessary.

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will consider setting up an advisory committee for natural medicines.

Mr. Hayhoe: No as this matter has been considered and I endorse the conclusion that such an advisory committee is not required.

Deafness

Mr. Millan asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people in England and Wales suffered complete loss of hearing as a result of trauma in the last year for which figures are available; and what facilities for rehabilitation and training are available for them.

Mr. Whitney: I regret that the statistics requested are not available centrally. We encourage a multi-disciplinary approach to the problems encountered by traumatically deafened people and many disciplines, such as hearing therapists, speech therapists and specialist social workers may be involved in their rehabilitation and training. The full range of the Manpower Services Commission's rehabilitation and training facilities are also available to deaf and partially hearing people. In the voluntary sector, the Link centre for deafened people is able to offer specialised residential assistance.

Departmental Offices (Camden)

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he is satisfied with the staffing levels of his Department's offices in Camden, particularly at Melton street.

Mr. Major: The staffing of the Department's local offices which deal with claimants in Camden is as follows and has been determined in accordance with the Department's complementing system, which aims to match the numbers of staff to the work load. A full complement review was begun on 14 October 1985 to reappraise the base complement for the Department and its results will be available in mid-1986 'A Guide to the DHSS Complementing System' giving details of complementing arrangements is in the Library.

Office	Complement 1985-86	Staff in post 1 November 1985
Euston (Melton St)	160	172·5
Cricklewood	87	99
Finsbury Park	183	198
Highgate	190	210
Neasden	147	148·5

Mr. J. Lowry

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) when the case of Mr. J. Lowry of 62 Parkhill avenue, Rusholme, Manchester was first referred by the local office of his Department to him for a decision concerning an ex-gratia payment;

(2) when he expects to respond to the letter from the hon. Member for Stretford of 8 October concerning Mr. J. Lowry.

Mr. Major: The case of Mr. Lowry was first received by officials for consideration of an ex-gratia payment on 4 March. I hope to be able to give the hon. Member a full reply to his letter of 8 October shortly.

Heating Addition

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the criteria for designating properties as eligible for estate rate heating addition; and which officers within each of his Department's regions or offices are responsible for identifying properties as eligible for estate rate heating addition.

Mr. Newton: Estate rate heating additions are payable to supplementary benefit claimants who are householders where the home is part of an estate with a heating system of which my right hon. Friend has in his discretion recognised the running costs to be disproportionately high. The factors taken into account in deciding whether or not to recognise particular heating systems are set out in paragraphs 4293-4296 of the 'S' manual of staff guidance, a copy of which is in the Library.

Following the introduction of the present scheme for estate rate heating additions in August 1982, all local offices were asked to identify estates with heating systems which might qualify, consulting fuel boards and landlords as necessary. We also enlisted the help of the local authority associations, which circulated their members with details of the policy, and a press release was issued. These measures have produced a large response from our own local offices, local authorities and other interested bodies. The local officers involved would vary from office to office but would be drawn from those dealing with supplementary benefit. Decisions on whether or not to recognise particular heating systems as disproportionately expensive are taken on behalf of my right hon. Friend by officials in the Department's headquarters.

Chlamydia

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what resources are devoted to research into and cure of chlamydia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: In January 1985 the Department commissioned a study of chlamydia trachomatis in the female genital tract, at a cost of £65,000 over two years at University College hospital, London. Studies of the epidemiology of chlamydial diseases are also being undertaken by the social medicine and health services research unit, United Medical and dental schools of Guy's and St. Thomas' hospitals, which is funded from the Department's health and personal social services research budget.

I understand that the Medical Research Council, which receives an annual grant-in-aid from the Department of Education and Science and which is the main government-funded agency for the promotion of medical research, is funding a number of projects which may be relevant to chlamydial infections.

Medical Accidents

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will take steps to introduce no-fault compensation for victims of medical accidents.

Mr. Whitney: We have no plans for changing the present system whereby compensation for victims of medical accidents depends upon proof of negligence in a court of law.

Benefit Claimants

Mr. Maxton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many claimants requiring medical examination in order to establish eligibility for benefit have been referred to consultants in each district health authority in England and Wales and in each health board in Scotland in the last year.

Mr. Newton: I regret that the information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Maxton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report the terms under which consultants undertake for his Department medical examinations in order to establish the eligibility of those claiming benefit.

Mr. Hayhoe: Consultants may be asked to examine claimants for benefit on an ad hoc basis which is outside their normal contractual commitments to their health authority. Under their terms and conditions of service (copies of which are in the Library), they are entitled to charge a fee for such work, which is known as category II work and for which there is an established scale of fees based on the National Health Service fees recommended by the Doctors and Dentists Review Body. We are currently reviewing the operation, costs and benefits of the category II arrangements.

Mr. Maxton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether a claimant who refuses to attend a private hospital or clinic to which he is referred for a medical examination, to establish eligibility for benefit, is automatically asked to attend a National Health Service hospital instead; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: Claimants are referred to a consultant for medical examination. The place of the examination is entirely a matter for the consultant concerned. Should a claimant object to a particular consultant, alternative arrangements can be considered.

Mr. Maxton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the cost to his Department of fees paid to consultants for undertaking medical examinations in order to establish the eligibility of those claiming benefit.

Mr. Newton: I regret that the information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost, since our central records of fees paid do not distinguish between GPs and consultants.

National Insurance Contribution

Mr. Wainwright asked the Secretary of State for Social Services to what extent remuneration of employees by way of profit-sharing is exempt from employers' and employees' national insurance contributions.

Mr. Major: Profits distributed by way of bonuses form part of normal earnings and are therefore liable for national insurance contributions. The Social Security (Contributions) Regulations 1979 specify conditions under which profits distributed through trust funds or certain profit-sharing schemes are disregarded for the purposes of National Insurance contributions.

Social Security Adjudication

Mr. Lewis Stevens asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he will make available the first report of the Chief Adjudication Officer on the standards of social security adjudication; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The report is being published today. Its publication follows from the provisions of the Health and Social Services and Social Security Adjudications Act, 1983, which sought to improve the quality of social security adjudication by various measures, including the requirement for the Chief Adjudication Officer to report annually on standards. We are grateful to the Chief Adjudication Officer for the efforts which he and his staff have put into it.

The report acknowledges that the period it covers was one of added difficulties for the social security system, stemming from the disputes in the coal mining industry and at the Department's computer centre at Newcastle. It makes a number of constructive suggestions which we shall consider carefully.

In the Government's view, many of the problems to which the report draws attention reflect the wider difficulties of a social security system which is often complex and confusing for both claimants and staff. We believe that our proposals for reform and simplification will make an important contribution to the continued improvement of adjudication standards which is our aim.

Dental Estimates Board (Computer)

Mr. Bellingham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether a decision has been reached on the replacement of the computer at the Dental Estimates Board.

Mr. Whitney: We have authorised replacement of the Dental Estimates Board's present ICL computer. Consultants have advised the Board on the equipment needed both to maintain present systems and to provide a foundation for future developments. Because of the need for the new computer to support the present software in parallel with the development of new and improved systems the replacement computer is being purchased from ICL, and a contract for new hardware worth £2.2 million to be delivered progressively up to October 1986 was signed by the board on 15 November 1985. Together with software and services the total contract over five years will amount to £4 million.

The new computer systems will enable dentists' claims for payment to be processed more efficiently and pave the way for future developments such as electronic transmission of claims. They should also improve the capacity of the board to monitor claims for any fraud and abuse by carrying out more routine checks automatically and enabling staff to concentrate on serious cases where there is cause for concern.

Computer replacement and development at the board form a significant part of the wider strategy for using computers in family practitioner services administration. As this and other parts of the strategy are implemented, administrative efficiency in the family practitioner services will be increased and will provide a better base for further improvements in patient care.

Finer Report

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for Social Services to what extent the recommendations of the Finer report have been implemented.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to the reply, 18 November 1985, c. 89.]: The Finer report contained 230 recommendations. Of the 134 which affected the Department of Health and Social Security, 56 have been implemented and 78 rejected. Those rejected were concerned, in the main, with the introduction of a guaranteed maintenance allowance.

CIVIL SERVICE

External Appointments

Mr. Wrigglesworth asked the Minister for the Civil Service what is his policy regarding the filling of posts by candidates from outside the Civil Service at grade 6 level and above; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: The great majority of Civil Service posts at grade 6 level and above are filled from within the service. Exceptions are made where particular skills and experience are required which are not available internally.

SCOTLAND

Forestry

25. Mr. Yeo asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will take steps to promote an increase in the acreage devoted to forestry.

Mr. John MacKay: The Government's policy for forestry continues to be based on the statement made to the House by my right hon. Friend on 10 December 1980. This envisaged a continuing expansion of forestry, with the private sector undertaking a greater share. In the four years to 31 March 1985, a total of some 91,000 hectares of new planting was carried out by private forestry interests under the Forestry Commission's grant-aid schemes and by the commission itself.

Rural Workshops Scheme

Mr. Bruce asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many applications for financial assistance have been received under the rural workshops scheme;

(2) how many applications for financial assistance have been accepted under the rural workshops scheme;

(3) what is the total value of assistance approved under the rural workshops scheme.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Of 60 applications received by the Scottish Development Agency, 44, involving offers of £372,161, have so far been approved.

Plastic Bullets

Mr. Ron Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many police authorities in Scotland have plastic bullets in store; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: No Scottish police force at present holds baton rounds (otherwise known as plastic bullets).

Motorway Lighting

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many miles of motorway in Scotland are currently lit; if he will break them down by motorway; how many miles of motorway are planned to be lit; of those miles lit, in the case of how many the lights were installed during construction of the motorway itself; in how many cases the lighting was installed separately after construction of the motorway itself; and what mileage is involved.

Mr. Ancram: The following lengths of motorway in Scotland are currently lit.

	Miles
*M8	18·5
*M9	0·5
M73	2·0
M74	0·4

Lighting was installed during construction on those lengths, totalling 19·6 miles, marked with an asterisk; the remainder, totalling 2·4 miles, had lighting installed after construction. It is planned to provide lighting on about 5 miles of the existing M74 motorway and, during construction, on a planned new 3-mile section of M74 and a planned new 4-mile section of the proposed M80.

Dounreay (Processing Plant)

Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what criteria he applied in determining that there provisions of section 45(2)(b) of the Town and Country Planning (Scotland) Act 1972 were not satisfied in respect of the planning application to build a reprocessing plant at Dounreay.

Mr. Ancram: My right hon. Friend has no grounds for believing that the proposed development has such unfamiliar technical or scientific aspects that he cannot properly determine the application through the means he has adopted, which include the appointment of a reporter to hold a public inquiry under section 267 of the Act and of a technical assessor to assist him.

Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether any official of his Department will present evidence of Government policy to the local public inquiry into the proposed reprocessing plant at Dounreay.

Mr. Ancram: An official of the Scottish Development Department will present evidence on radioactive waste management policy at the inquiry. In addition, an official of Her Majesty's Industrial Pollution Inspectorate will give evidence on the regulatory framework which controls the disposal of radioactive wastes. Written statements by each of these bodies are being submitted to the chief reporter and should be available to the public within the next few days.

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what criteria he applied in determining that the provisions of section 45(2)(a) of the Town and Country Planning (Scotland) Act 1972 were not satisfied in respect of the planning application to build a reprocessing plant at Dounreay.

Mr. Younger: I have no grounds for believing that the application raises considerations of national or regional importance relevant to of whether I should grant planning permission, which cannot be properly evaluated through the procedures I have already adopted. These procedures include calling in the application for my decision and the holding of a public local inquiry under section 267 of the Act.

Hearing Loss (Trauma)

Mr. Millan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people in Scotland suffered complete or virtually complete loss of hearing as a result of trauma, in the last year for which figures are available; and what facilities for rehabilitation and training are available for them.

Mr. Younger: I regret that the information is not held centrally. A multi-disciplinary approach is encouraged to the rehabilitation and training of those who have suffered a loss of hearing from whatever cause. This can involve audiometricians, speech therapists, social workers and other specialist services. The Manpower Services Commission's full range of rehabilitation and training facilities is available to the deaf and partially-hearing. In the voluntary sector, the link centre for deafened people is able to offer specialised residential assistance.

SDA Funding (Lothian)

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Scotland why he has refused funding from the Scottish Development Agency to Gorgie road railway bridge, and Pilrig Dalmery church, and other projects in Lothian; and what assessment he has made of consequential job losses in Lothian.

Mr. Allan Stewart: It is for the Scottish Development Agency to determine whether individual land renewal projects merit sufficient priority to receive funding in any particular financial year. I understand that the agency has decided to defer meantime a number of schemes, including the two mentioned. There were 3,425 confirmed redundancies in Lothian in 1984, and the provisional figure for January to August 1985 is 2,777.

Medical Accidents (Compensation)

Mr. Maxton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will take steps to introduce no-fault compensation for victims of medical accidents in Scotland.

Mr. John MacKay: No. Questions of compensation are for the courts to decide, if a settlement cannot be agreed between the parties.

Legionnaire's Disease

Mr. Martin asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if, in the light of the further confirmed cases of legionnaire's disease in Glasgow, he will now institute a public inquiry into the outbreak; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: The environmental health department of Glasgow district council and the Greater Glasgow health board are already conducting a full investigation into the cases of legionnaire's disease at Roystonhill. The report of this investigation will be carefully studied, but on the information presently available I do not think that a public inquiry is called for.

Greater Glasgow Health Board

Mr. Maxton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many patients, whose permanent address was outwith the area covered by the Greater Glasgow health board, received treatment at hospitals or clinics controlled by the Greater Glasgow health board in 1979, 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983, 1984 and 1985.

Mr. John MacKay: The information is not readily available in the form requested. The table shows for the years 1979 to 1983 (the latest available year) the number of patients discharged from inpatient care in non-psychiatric hospitals in the Greater Glasgow health board area, whose normal place of residence lay outwith the board's area or was not known.

	Number
1979	38,109
1980	39,914
1981	41,339
1982	38,306
1983	43,808

Mr. Maxton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people were employed by the Greater Glasgow health board in 1979, 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983 and 1984; and in what categories.

Mr. John MacKay: The number of people employed by Greater Glasgow health board during the periods in question is set out in the table.

Mr. Maxton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the number of outpatients treated in hospitals controlled by the Greater Glasgow health board in 1979, 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983, 1984 and 1985.

Mr. John MacKay: The information is not available in the form requested. The table shows outpatient attendances at hospitals and clinics in the Greater Glasgow health board area in the financial years 1979-80 to 1984-85, and includes accident and emergency cases and day patient attendances.

1984-85	2,823,710

Mr. Maxton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the number of inpatients treated in hospitals controlled by the Greater Glasgow health board in 1979, 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983, 1984 and 1985.

Mr. John MacKay: The information is not available in the form requested. The table shows the number of patients discharged from inpatient treatment in hospitals in the Greater Glasgow health board area in the financial years 1979-80 to 1984-85.

Hospitals (Patient Costs)

Mr. Maxton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the factors used in calculating the average cost per National Health Service patient in hospitals in Scotland.

Mr. John MacKay: Figures in "Scottish Health Service Costs" are expressed in terms of cost per weighted patient day for each hospital. This is arrived at by apportioning a hospital's running costs (which exclude laboratory costs and some other ancillary costs) over the total patient activity in the hospital (that is inpatients and, on a weighted basis, outpatients, day patients, accident and emergency cases and day cases).

Cervical Smears

Mr. Maxton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the average time taken from collection of cervical smears to the result being given to the referring doctor or clinic in each of the health boards in Scotland.

Mr. John MacKay: This information is not available centrally.

Outpatient Appointments

Mr. Maxton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the average waiting times for outpatient appointments for each medical category in each health board in Scotland in 1979, 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983, 1984 and 1985.

Mr. John MacKay: This information is not available centrally.

National Health Service

Mr. Maxton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will make available additional resources to health boards in Scotland equal to the cost of funding pay increases awarded recently by Health Service pay review boards;

(2) if he will make a statement on the implications of the autumn statement for the level of the National Health Service budget in Scotland for 1985-86; and if he will express his answer in both absolute and percentage terms.

Mr. John MacKay: My right hon. Friend has no plans to make any change to the level of provision for the health programme in the current year. He will announce shortly decisions about the allocation of resources to his programmes, including health, for future years.

Child Abuse

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many persons have been convicted in Scotland of offences involving child abuse in each of the last five years; and if he will break the totals down by offence.

Mr. John MacKay: The age of the victims of crimes and offences is not recorded in the statistics collected by the Scottish Home and Health Department. However, some of the categories in the classification of crimes and offences used in the statistics relate specifically to some form of child abuse. Figures for those categories are given in the table.

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many persons have been convicted in Scotland of offences involving the sexual abuse of children in each of the last five years; and if he will break the totals down by offence.

Mr. John MacKay: The age of the victims of crimes and offences is not included in the statistics on court proceedings collected by the Scottish Home and Health Department. However, two of the categories in the classification of crimes and offences used in the statistics relate specifically to some form of sexual abuse of children. Figures for these categories are given in the table.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Outgoers Scheme

14. Mr. Hicks asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the total amount of milk surrendered under the outgoers scheme; and if he will make a statement.

21. Mr. Knox asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the present position concerning the outgoers scheme for dairy farmers.

Mr. Gummer: By 15 November, 1,639 producers had committed themselves to surrender some 277 million litres of quota under the outgoers scheme in England and Wales. A further 13 producers offering just over 3 million litres are currently interested in joining the scheme.

17. Mr. Strang asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received about the European Community Commission's proposed new outgoers scheme for milk producers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jopling: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave earlier to my hon. Friend the Member for Romsey and Waterside (Mr. Colvin).

Pig Farmers

15. Mr. Shersby asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to minimise the regulatory burden now applying to small swill feed pig farmers.

Mrs. Fenner: It is in the general interests of the livestock industry that strict animal health rules are maintained both in relation to swill feeders and others to ensure that the risk of spreading disease is minimised.

Conservation

16. Mr. Stephen Ross asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what response he is making to the research report published by the Council for the Protection of Rural England and the Council for National Parks entitled "How to Help Farmers and Keep England Beautiful", a copy of which has been sent to him; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Fenner: We have only recently received a copy of this report, which we are still studying.

Wheat (Machineability Test)

18. Mr. Nicholas Baker asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he plans to raise with his Common Market counterparts the application of the machineability test to British wheat and its stringency, so as to permit export of grain from intervention stocks to famine-stricken areas of Third world countries.

Mr. Gummer: My officials have raised the question of the irrelevance of the machineability test to food aid actions on very many occasions in recent years, but have received little support from other member states which have no difficulty in meeting this standard. There is little prospect of its being changed for food aid purposes, but this requirement has not hindered the Community's ability to provide food aid.

Severe Weather Payments

19. Mr. Livsey asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proposals he has to give additional financial assistance to the agriculture industry during the winter months.

20. Mr. Kirkwood asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he has taken to assist farmers following the recent summer weather.

Mr. Jopling: I refer the hon. Members to the reply I gave earlier to my hon. Friend the Member for Dumfries (Sir H. Monro).

Pelagic Fisheries

22. Mr. Kennedy asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he is satisfied with the current operation of pressure stock licensing arrangements; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: I have nothing further to add at this stage to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Orkney and Shetland (Mr. Wallace) earlier.

Potato Industry (Northern Ireland)

23. Rev. Ian Paisley asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he intends to take to assist the potato industry of Northern Ireland after the bad summer weather.

Mr. Gummer: Northern Ireland potato prices are reasonably firm at present, but market support in the form of a stockfeed scheme could be introduced later in the season if the trend in market prices showed this to be necessary.

Advisory and Research Services

24. Mrs. Currie asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about the closure of Ministry of Agriculture research units.

Mr. Jopling: As announced on 11 October 1985, four Agricultural Development and Advisory Service laboratories will close from 1 April 1986 as part of the planned reduction in ADAS expenditure in 1986-87 on research and development. I shall arrange for a copy of the announcement to be printed in the Official Report.

Following is the announcement:

October 11, 1985

ADAS R AND D—EXPENDITURE CUTS

Research and development spending by the Agriculture Development and Advisory Service—ADAS—will be reduced by some £4 million in 1986-87. This is in line with earlier decisions to reduce Government expenditure on agricultural research and development.

This will be achieved by rationalising the organisation of ADAS's R & D and concentrating work on fewer sites. This approach is intended to maintain ADAS's capability to respond to advice on the longer term priorities for R & D which the priorities board is considering, and to respond to the needs of industry as expressed through the financial contributions which the Government consider the industry should make towards the cost of R & D from which it benefits. It has been endorsed by the priorities board.

As part of these economies the Agricultural Science Service laboratories at Shardlow hall, Derby; Llanishen, Cardiff; and Bangor; and the Department of the Central Veterinary Laboratory located as Lasswade, Edinburgh, will close from April 1, 1986. The arrangements for maintaining the essential services needed in the areas concerned in future will be announced later.

About 200 ADAS and support staff are employed at these laboratories. Some of these staff can be redeployed, and a number of job losses can be achieved by natural wastage, but the total cannot be achieved without some redundancies. The staff are being informed, and their staff associations consulted as appropriate on the implementation of these decisions. It is not possible at this stage to state the number or location of redundancies which will be necessary.

Mr. John asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the statutory services provided by the Agricultural Development and Advisory Service, stating in each case (a) the annual cost of statutory work, (b) the revenue currently yielded by existing charges, (c) whether he intends to seek to increase existing charges or introduce new charges in respect of that service and (d) what additional revenue he expects to result from the extension of charges.

Mr. Jopling: As regards the range of statutory functions of my Department which are performed wholly or partly by ADAS, and the cost and revenue of those functions, I would refer the hon. Member to the report "Ministerial Information in MAFF (MINIM) 1985", copies of which are now in the Library of the House. The areas of statutory work for which I intend to introduce charges or increase charges were detailed in my written reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Gillingham (Mr. Couchman) on 7 November, which, together with the proposed charges for advisory services, are expected to yield additional revenue of about £11 million in 1987-88.

Mr. John asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will state the total number of staff in the Agricultural Development and Advisory Service, the number in each of the four constituent services and the number engaged in front-line advisory work in each year since 1979.

Mr. Jopling: The numbers of staff in each Service were as follows:

	Agriculture Service	Agricultural Science Service	Land and Water Service	State Veterinary Service	Central Units	Total	Front line advisers
1 April 1979	1,798	1155½	788	1,669½	52	5,463	1,601
1 April 1980	1,789	1,190½	789½	1,655	25	5,449	1,641
1 April 1981	1,753½	1,168	771½	1,585	22	5,300	1,721
1 April 1982	1,647½	1,165	704½	1,519½	21	5,057½	1,501
1 April 1983	1,639	1,131	638½	1,468½	12	4,889	1,439
1 April 1984	1,631	1,137½	587	1,448	10	4,813½	1,395
1 April 1985	1,619	1,141½	593	1,422	11	4,786½	1,409

Notes:

1. Part-time staff are counted as a half.
2. The former land service and land drainage service were amalgamated in 1981.
3. "Front line advisers" has been interpretated as meaning ADAS staff in regular direct contact with the farming and horticulture industry. Figures are therefore based on totals of regional and divisional staff of the agricultural service and the land and water service whose duties are primarily advisory. Back-up advice, including laboratory analytical and diagnostic services, is also provided by the agricultural science service and, through veterinary practitioners, by the state veterinary service, whose staff are not included in the figures given above.

Mr. John asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many advisers employed in the Agricultural Development and Advisory Service are specialists in (a) conservation and (b) the diversification of farm businesses.

Mr. Jopling: There is no group of ADAS officers classified as conservation specialists, but a large number are engaged in advisory, research or other work with an important and very varied environmental content. There are seven full-time specialist advisers in socio-economics (which includes the diversification of farm businesses) and, again, many other ADAS officers devote part of their time to this work.

Mr. John asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the number of visits made by Agricultural Development and Advisory Service advisers to farms each year and the proportion of such visits which arise from (a) statutory functions, (b) advisory functions and (c) research and development; and what was the proportion of such visits which were initiated by the farmer concerned.

Mr. Jopling: I regret that the information is not available in the form requested. The following table sets out for the last two years the ADAS resources in man years consumed by statutory, advisory and research and development functions.

Man years

	Statutory	Advisory	Research and Development
1983-84	1,766	1,444	1,597
1984-85	1,716	1,479	1,648

Food (Diethylene Glycol)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what further tests his Ministry intends to run to investigate the possible presence of quantities of diethylene glycol in sweets, pasties, sausage rolls, cakes and puddings; and what guidelines he intends to issue to packaging material manufacturers about replacing diethylene and monothylene glycols in regenerated cellulose film for wrapping food.

Mrs. Fenner: Manufacturers of regenerated cellulose film used for wrapping food have already taken steps to replace diethylene and monothylene glycol with alternative softeners. In addition, I expect that agreement will soon be reached on a proposal to amend the EC directive on regenerated cellulose film (directive 83/229/EEC) by introducing more stringent controls on the use of these glycols.

Once agreed, this amendment will provide statutory backing to the measures already adopted by the manufacturers. My Department is continuing to carry out regular tests on food wrapped in regenerated cellulose film.

Aujeszky's Disease

Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has given further consideration to giving extra financial aid to the Pig Disease Eradication Fund Ltd. to meet the costs of the Aujeszky's disease eradication scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jopling: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Rutland and Melton (Mr. Latham).

Intervention Stocks

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give the precise locations of all intervention stores in the United Kingdom on 15 November if he will give full details of the volume and nature of the stocks held at each location; what is the longest period of time for which cereals have been stored at each location; what is the estimated total cost to the United Kingdom of storing EEC food surpluses here in 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement setting out the location of the various public and private stores financed by the Intervention Board for Agricultural Produce.

Mr. Gummer: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowance Scheme

Mr. John asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) in how many instances in each of the past five years payments of hill livestock compensatory allowances have been withheld on conservation grounds;

2) if he plans to amend the hill livestock compensatory allowance scheme to take account of the problems of overgrazing and of consequential damage to semi-natural vegetation.

Mr. Gummer: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Agriculture and Horticulture Grant Scheme

Mr. John asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food in respect of how many farm improvement schemes containing moorland improvement proposals, a potential claim for grant remains under the agriculture and horticulture grant scheme.

Mrs. Fenner: I regret that this information is not available because there was no requirement under the agriculture and horticulture grant scheme for the Ministry to approve proposals before work was done.

Environment (Sensitive Areas)

Mr. John asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what sums of money he has provisionally allocated for the establishment of environmentaly sensitive areas within the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Fenner: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Strawberry Pulp

Mr. Freud asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has in respect of the proportion of strawberry pulp imported from the Netherlands (a) which is not produced in that country and (b) which is previously imported into the Netherlands from Poland.

Mrs. Fenner: I regret that no statistics are available. However, I would point out that the figures of United Kingdom imports by source which I gave to the hon. Member recently related to country of origin rather than to country of consignment. Country of origin is defined as that in which the final substantial processing took place.

Food (Quality)

Mr. Pike asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he proposes to take any steps to seek to improve the quality of food.

Mrs. Fenner: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Stretford (Mr. Lloyd).

EC (Surplus Food Stocks)

Mr. Canavan asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the current amount and value of surplus food stored in the EEC; and what is the storage cost.

Mr. Gummer: A note setting out the volume of Community intervention stocks, including those of foodstuffs, on the latest available dates is deposited in the Library of the House and is updated monthly.

Stocks are valued only once a year. The value of Community stocks of beef, breadwheat, butter, skimmed milk powder and sugar on 30 November 1984 was £4·2 billion. Storage and handling costs of Community intervention stocks are not available.

ENERGY

Domestic Energy Prices

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for Energy what has been the percentage increase in domestic gas and electricity prices, respectively, in each year since 1979; and, in each case, what has been the overall increase between 1979 and 1985 in cash and real terms.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: The information requested is given in the table below:

Percentage increases in average domestic gas and electricity prices

	Gas per cent.	Electricity per cent.
1979 to 1980	17	27
1980 to 1981	26	20
1981 to 1982	25	10
1982 to 1983	12	4
1983 to 1984	4	1
1984 to third quarter 1985*	5	5
1979 to third quarter 1985*
In current terms	124	85
In deflated terms†	36	12

* Comparable data for 1985 as a whole will not become available until after the end of the year. Data for the third quarter of 1985 are the latest available.

Nuclear Power Stations (Inquiries)

Mr. Fisher asked the Secretary of State for Energy what has been the cost of each public inquiry into the construction of nuclear power stations since 1970.

Mr. Goodlad: Three such inquiries have been held since 1970. Information on the costs of the first two inquiries, for Portskewett and Connah's Quay, both held in 1971, is not readily available. The final cost of the third inquiry, for Sizewell B, will become evident only when the inspector has completed his report. However, costs up to 31 October 1985 either falling to my Department or recoverable to the CEGB total approximately £2,890,000.

Coal-firing Scheme

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement about the future of the coal-firing scheme.

Mr. Peter Walker: I attach great importance to keeping energy costs to industry to a minimum and have therefore decided to extend the deadline for receipt of applications for grants under the coal-firing scheme to the end of June 1987. The £75 million ceiling on total grants offered will no longer apply; I will make funds available as necessary to cover this extension. The exchange risk guarantee scheme on loans from the European Coal and Steel Community for coal-firing projects will be discontinued as from 31 December 1985 though of course companies will still be able to take advantage of the attractive terms of the loan facility itself.

Paul King and Lee James Bradley

Mr. Haynes asked the Secretary of State for Energy, what recommendations he has received from Her Majesty's coroner for Nottinghamshire arising out of the death of Paul King and Lee James Bradley.

Mr. Goodlad: I set out below the jury's recommendations as reported to me by the coroner:—

"We the jury recommend:—

(a) Closed sub-stations or improvements to stop children climbing in.

(b) Recommend a more frequent inspection of sub-stations.

(c) Look into some kind of system to detect a build up of pressure within the cover box to detect a breakage in the outer covering."

I have asked the Electricity Council to consider these recommendations as a matter of urgency and to advise. It is setting up a working party for that purpose.

TRANSPORT

M25 (Flora and Fauna)

Mr. Robert B. Jones asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is his Department's policy towards the development of flora and fauna on the verges of the M25.

Mrs. Chalker: It is our policy to encourage a varied flora on all motorways, including the M25. In 1970 a survey showed that 384 species of flowering plant, including one third of all British grasses, were growing on the M1 where only five had been sown during construction. The survey is being repeated this year to assess the effects of the reduction of grass cutting on the enrichment of herbage by other species.

We take no specific steps to encourage fauna, but the development of a rich and varied flora and the absence of man's influence on motorway verges provide ideal conditions for a wide range of fauna to establish themselves.

Trinity House

Mr. Lofthouse asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will arrange for an exhibition relating to the work of the Corporation of Trinity House to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. Ridley: The corporation, in consultation with the House authorities, have already made arrangements for such an exhibition: I shall have pleasure in opening it on Monday 2 December at 4.00 pm.

Road Accidents

Mr. Weetch asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is the estimated proportion of all accidental deaths in the United Kingdom which result from accidents involving motor vehicles.

Mrs. Chalker: According to the definition of road accident death used by this Department, that is death occurring within 30 days of the road accident, 38 per cent. of all accidental deaths were due to road traffic accidents in 1984.

However, if the definition employed by the Registrars General is used, that is death occurring within one year of the road accident, road deaths made up 40 per cent. of all accidental deaths in 1984.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Territorial Army

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many prison officers presently members of the Territorial Army will be prevented from being members of the Territorial Army under revised guidelines;

(2) why certain prison officers are prevented from joining the Territorial Army.

Mr. Mellor: Prison officers are not permitted to join the Territorial Army because they are classified as a reserved occupation and would not be available for call-up in a national emergency. Figures for prison officers prevented from joining the TA are not collected centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Schools (Police Visits)

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will list the education authorities within the Metropolitan police area in which some or all schools ban visits from the police;

(2) if he will make a statement on the implications for the work of the Metropolitan police of the banning of police visits by certain schools in London;

(3) what information the Metropolitan police have as to the number of schools within their area at which police visits are banned.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I am advised by the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that there are 21 schools, all within the area of the Inner London education authority, which refuse to allow an educational input by the police. In addition to establishing good relationships with young people, the police seek to make children at the primary level aware of dangers—on the roads, canals, rivers and railway lines and of going off with strangers. At the next stage the dangers of drugs and solvent misuse and offensive weapons, as well as advice on self protection, feature in the valuable exchanges. The development of a better understanding of the role and function of the police is an important element of the commissioner's strategy for the improvements of relations between the forces and community in general. I fully share the commissioner's concern at the lack of co-operation of a few schools in promoting this objective.

Surveillance and Monitoring

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will describe the role of (i) the central intelligence unit and (ii) A8 department of the Metropolitan police in relation to surveillance and the monitoring of political and community developments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: After the urban riots in 1981 all police forces were invited to develop systems for monitoring rises in community tension which might foreshadow serious public disorder. In London each district reports on a regular basis on the level of tension in the area. The central information unit in A8 branch and New Scotland Yard collates these district reports for senior management to consider whether action is required to prevent tension escalating into riots.

Custodial Sentences (Women)

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many women were committed into custody by magistrates courts in default of payment of a fine where the original offence was one of loitering or soliciting during 1982, 1983, 1984 and the first six months of 1985.

Mr. David Mellor: The information available is given in the following table:

Prostitutes committed into custody by magistrates' courts in default of payment of a fine

	Number
1982	83
1983	168
1984	269
January—June 1985*	151

* Provisional.

Liverpool Prison

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department for how many hours in the week ended 2 November, or any other recent typical week, the workshops in Liverpool prison were open; what was the average number of prisoners employed; how many classes took place and for how many hours; what was the average number of inmates in each class; how many individual prisoners attended at least one class during the week; and how much time on average each prisoner spent out of his cell during that week.

Mr. Mellor: In the week ended 2 November 1985 two of the eleven workshops at Liverpool were closed for structural alterations. The remaining nine workshops were open for an average of 13 hours employing an average of 41 prisoners. In addition 253 prisoners were employed on domestic, catering and maintenance duties.

Thirty-nine classes were held during this week, with total class hours of 72½ and the average number of inmates attending each class was 7·7. One hundred and eighty inmates attended at least one class. It is not possible other than at disproportionate cost, to calculate the average amount of time spent out of cells.

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the maximum number of prisoners who can be employed in workshops in Liverpool prison on any one day.

Mr. Mellor: Six hundred and seven.

Manchester Prison

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department for how many hours in the week ended 2 November, or any other recent typical week, the workshops in Manchester prison were open; what was the average number of prisoners employed; how many classes took place and for how many hours; what was the average number of inmates in each class; how many individual prisoners attended at least one class during the week; and how much time on average each prisoner spent out of his cell during that week.

Mr. Mellor: In the week ended 2 November 1985, the five workshops at Manchester prison were open for an average of 19 hours employing an average of 33 prisoners. In addition, 246 prisoners were employed on domestic, catering and maintenance duties.

Ninety-nine classes were held during this week, with total class hours of 188. The average number of inmates attending each class was 10·1. About 200 inmates attended at least one class. It is not possible, other than at disproportionate cost, to calculate the average amount of time spent out of cells.

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the maximum number of prisoners who can be employed in workshops in Manchester prison on any one day.

Mr. Mellor: Two hundred and nine.

Police (Wales)

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the budget for each police force in Wales for the current financial year.

Mr. Giles Shaw: This is a matter for the police authority. The police budget for each force is determined locally by the police authority, subject to their statutory responsibilities and in consultation with the chief constable.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list those police forces in Wales whose manpower is below establishment, and in which the police authority has stated that this is attributable to budgetary restrictions.

Mr. Giles Shaw: On 31 October 1985 the authorised establishment and strength of the police forces in Wales was as follows:

	Authorised Establishment	Police Strength	Vacancies
Dyfed Powys	934	930	4
Gwent	978	971	7
North Wales	1,316	1,259	57
South Wales	3,109	3,053	56

The police budget for each force is determined by the police authority, subject to their statutory responsibilities, and in consultation with the chief constable. I understand that the North Wales police and the South Wales constabulary are holding police vacancies for budgetary reasons.

Dogs (Tail Docking)

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his Department's policy towards the proposed Council of Europe convention banning the docking of dogs' tails; and what consultations he has undertaken on the issue with representatives of breeders and owners in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Mellor: The Government welcome the continuing work in the Council of Europe on issues of animal welfare in general and are maintaining a close interest in the preparation of a draft convention for the protection of pet animals. We are currently in correspondence with the Kennel Club and the Joint Advisory Committee on Pets in Society about various provisions in the draft convention, notably the article which would prohibit tail-docking and certain other surgical procedures unless a veterinary surgeon considers it to be in the interest of the welfare of the animal. We are also taking into account a number of representations about tail-docking received from owners and breeders.

Correspondence

Mr. Stephen Ross asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will answer the letter from the hon. Member for the Isle of Wight, concerning building contracts at Parkhurst prison and dated 21 October.

Mr. Mellor: My noble Friend replied to the hon. Member on 21 November.

Shops Bill

Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list those organisations from which he has recently received objections to the deregulation of Sunday trading.

Mr. Waddington: Since 1 October 1985 we have received objections to the deregulation of Sunday trading from the following organisations:

Hereford and district Butchers Association
Birmingham battalion of the Boys Brigade
Blackrod town council
Bebington council of Churches
Mid Cheshire Fellowship of Baptist Churches
Wolverhampton Deanery Synod
The Hallam branch (Sheffield) Christian Constituency Movement

Civil Defence

Dr. Roger Thomas asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what level of grant is currently being made to the Carmarthen district council in relation to the construction of an emergency control centre;

(2) if his Department will make extra resources available to Carmarthen district council to cover additional costs incurred during construction of the emergency control centre at Carmarthen; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: An application for civil defence grant aid at the normal rate of 75 per cent. on capital costs of £60,000 for the construction of an emergency centre at Carmarthen has been approved. Payment of grant on additional cost resulting from security measures necessary to ensure that the work can continue is also eligible for grant aid, and consideration is being given to a further application for this purpose.

Prison Building

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what were the exact sums spent on prison buildings and accommodation in England and Wales for each of the last 10 years, giving figures for each year; and what is the proposed expenditure for 1986 and 1987.

Mr. Mellor: The information requested is as follows:

1976-77	31·8
1977-78	33·4
1978-79	33·3
1979-80	36·6
1980-81	48·2
1981-82	51·4
1982-83	65·8
1983-84	88·4
1985-86	107·0

These figures include expenditure on the design, construction, refurbishment, repair and maintenance of prison buildings and staff quarters. They exclude expenditure on the purchase of land and buildings and staff costs. The figure quoted for 1985-86 is the most recent available forecast of the total relevant expenditure in the current financial year. Details of proposed expenditure in 1986-87 and 1987-88 will be published in due course in the 1986 public expenditure white paper.

Leeds Prison

Mr. Waller asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about progress made in relieving overcrowding at Leeds prison.

Mr. Mellor: Overcrowding at Leeds will be relieved by HM prison Lindholme which has now received its first prisoners, and by the changes of role at HM prison Hull and HM remand centre Thorp Arch which will take place as soon as a small number of outstanding staffing issues have been resolved.

Mr. Waller asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about incidents involving violence against prison officers which occurred at Leeds prison on 19 November.

Mr. Mellor: At approximately 8.10 am, staff dealt with an incident between inmates. Shortly afterwards, other incidents occurred. A small number of inmates were involved in these disturbances and each incident was quickly dealt with by staff. Unfortunately, in the process, some injuries were sustained by members of staff, and six officers were sent for hospital treatment. One was initially detained but was allowed home later the same day. The police have been asked to investigate, in accordance with normal practice. Furthermore, at approximately 8.45 am, two inmates reported seeing flames in a warm air duct. As a precautionary measure, the wing was evacuated and the fire brigade attended, but no evidence of fire was found. The prison resumed normal working shortly before 9.15 am and has been operating normally since.

Criminal Proceedings (Time Limits)

Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give details of his field trials of time limits in criminal proceedings.

Mr. Hurd: Field trials are now beginning in the four areas served by the Crown court centres at Birmingham, Bristol, Maidstone and Southwark. Test limits will apply to cases from 25 November in magistrates' courts and from January in the Crown court. For this stage of the trials, the prosecution has been encouraged to act as if the time limits had statutory force, but the statutory procedures for seeking extensions and the consequences of breaching limits will not apply. The courts will have regard to the limits on the prosecution in arranging their business.

Where the accused is in custody the test limits are 56 days to summary trial, 70 days to committal for trial (or beginning of committal proceedings), and 112 days from committal to arraignment, except at Southwark where this limit will be 182 days. The overall test limits which apply whether the accused is in custody or on bail are 20 weeks to summary trial or committal, and at Birmingham and Bristol 26 weeks from committal to arraignment.

The longer custody limit at Southwark and the lack of overall limits there or at Maidstone reflect current circumstances in the Crown court in London and the south east, where too high a proportion of cases would inevitably overrun limits which were achievable elsewhere. The test limits are intended to be realistic initial targets for improvement on current performance.

We shall study the effects of the test limits over about six months. We have it in mind thereafter to make regulations to apply statutory limits in the trial areas only in order to conduct a more lifelike test before wider implementation.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Hearing-impaired People (Aid)

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance Her Majesty's Government have given to deaf or hearing-impaired people in Third world countries.

Mr. Raison: In 1984-85 about £28,000 was spent from the aid programme on assistance to the deaf and hearing-impaired in developing countries. This included a programme for the development of education centres for deaf children in Pakistan, a number of projects jointly funded with voluntary organisations and some training. In addition some £20 million was spent on activities which contributed to the general health of the community, including the prevention of disability.

Tropical Development and Research Institute

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs for what reasons he appointed a non-scientist to be director of the Tropical Development and Research Institute.

Mr. Raison: An open competition was held earlier this year to try to identify a suitable successor to the present director of the Tropical Development and Research institute. The vacancy was widely advertised in the appropriate journals, but the competition failed to produce anyone who was judged to have the right combination of scientific and administrative skills. Since the new director will face the major task of managing the relocation of the component parts of the institute on a new site at Chatham in 1987-88, proven management ability was a prime requirement. An assistant secretary (Mr. G.A. Beattie) in the Overseas Development Administration has accordingly been appointed, on temporary promotion, to the post for the next two to three years. The aim will be for this officer to be succeeded in due course by an officer with a scientific background.

Africa (Wheat Aid)

Sir Nicholas Bonsor asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the cost of sending one tonne of wheat in overseas aid to Africa; and of that cost, how much is (a) storage, (b) purchase cost of wheat, (c) road transport in the United Kingdom, (d) shipping and (e) transportation within the African continent.

Mr. Raison: Tenders are invited for wheat purchased under the British food aid programme on a fob basis. The price paid therefore includes unidentifiable elements for storage and road transport to the shipping port. The average recent purchase price for wheat has been £110 per tonne fob.

Shipment is normally arranged on our behalf by the World Food Programme at an average cost of £42 per tonne to Africa. Internal transport costs vary considerably: on the most recent shipments to Ethiopia the estimated cost is £100 per tonne.

PRIME MINISTER

Strategic Defence Initiative

Mr. Ashdown asked the Prime Minister whether she was informed in advance by President Reagan of his willingness to hand over strategic defence initiative technology to the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics; and why the United States is refusing to transfer the same technology to the United Kingdom.

The Prime Minister: President Reagan has referred on several occasions to the possibility of sharing with the Russians technology arising from the strategic defence initiative research programme. For its part, the United Kingdom has had intensive discussions with the United States about participation in the research programme. A statement will be made about this at the appropriate time.

State Opening of Parliament

Mr. Allen Adams asked the Prime Minister what was the cost to public funds of the State opening of Parliament on 6 November.

The Prime Minister [pursuant to her reply, 18 November 1985, col. 1]: The cost to the Property Services Agency of the State opening of Parliament on 6 November 1985 is estimated at £42,200. This includes the cost of providing stands for guests in the Royal Gallery, building camera positions for TV broadcasting and erecting the ornamental awning outside the Peers' Entrance.

No additional costs were incurred by the Metropolitan police as a result of the policing of the State opening.

Ministry of Defence costs are estimated at be about £17,000.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Pirate Radio Stations

Mr. Greg Knight asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the total cost to public funds during the last 12 months of the surveillance and other activities carried out against off-shore pirate radio stations.

Mr. Butcher: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Job Creation

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish in the Official Report his Department's estimates, for the years 1978 to 1984, for Scotland, Wales, Northern Ireland and the English regions, of the numbers of jobs created by (i) regional policy and (ii) other employment assistance measures, and of the costs per job.

Mr. Butcher: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Gross Domestic Fixed Capital

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list, for each regional area of the United Kingdom, and by industry groups, the gross domestic fixed capital formation for 1979 and for the most recent year for which figures are available, at current prices and at 1979 prices.

Mr. Butcher: Constant price figures are not available. The latest published current price series for the years 1974 and 1980 to 1982 appeared at page 92 of the November 1984 issue of "Economic Trends". Comparable updated figures for 1979 are not readily available and would be costly to compile. More up-to-date information will be published in the November 1985 issue of "Economic Trends".

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list, for each regional area and by Government service, the gross domestic fixed capital formation for 1979 and for the most recent year for which figures are available (a) at 1979 prices and (b) at current prices.

Mr. Butcher: The information requested is not available at constant prices. Analyses by Government service are not readily available for 1979 and would be costly to compile. Available figures, expressed at current prices, were published for years 1974 and 1980 to 1982 at pages 92 and 93 of the November 1984 issue of "Economic Trends". More up-to-date information will be published in the November 1985 issue of "Economic Trends".

Manufacturing Industry (Capital Expenditure)

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list, for each regional area and for major industry groups, the capital expenditure in manufacturing for 1979 and for the most recent year for which figures are available (a) at 1979 prices and (b) at current prices.

Mr. Butcher: Constant price figures are not available. The latest available figures, at current prices and relating to capital expenditure in the standard regions of the United Kingdom, are given in the following table. Comparable information for the industry groups shown in this table is not readily available for 1979 and would be costly to compile.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs why he is unable to publish details of his Department's revised spending plans for 1986-87 and 1987-88 until January 1986.

Mr. Rifkind: Departments are still considering precise allocations. When completed, details of all departmental spending plans will be co-ordinated and published in the public expenditure White Paper in the usual way.

Guatemala

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the implications for the future of consular relations between the United Kingdom and Guatemala of the recent elections in Guatemala.

Mr. Rifkind: The elections are not yet complete: there will be a second round between the two leading candidates on 8 December. We hope the election of a democratic Government in Guatemala will facilitate a resumption of consular relations for which we have always been ready.

Poland

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he has taken to publicise and protest against abuses of human rights in Poland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: During my right hon. and learned Friend's visit to Warsaw in April, he made clear the widespread concern in the United Kingdom about human rights in Poland. He also discussed the situation with members of the opposition and leaders of the church. We have since protested several times to the Polish authorities, in particular about the harsh sentences given to three leading members of Solidarity in June. I believe our views are well known in this country and in Poland.

Miami (British Consulate)

Mr. Sims asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has any plans to reopen the British consulate in Miami.

Mr. Renton: The British consulate in Miami will reopen in the first half of next year. This reflects both the growing economic importance of Florida and Miami's role in Caribbean trade.

ENVIRONMENT

Housing (Rushmoor)

Mr. John Fraser asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many empty houses are held by the Property Services Agency in the borough of Rushmoor in its own right and under management for the Ministry of Defence.

Sir George Young: In the borough of Rushmoor, the Property Services Agency holds under its management 19 Ministry of Defence empty houses; 6 are in the process of transfer to private purchasers; 1 is with an estate agent for sale on the open market, and 12 form part of a larger group of houses offered for sale to the borough. There are none held by PSA in its own right but there are other Government-owned empty houses in the borough for which the Property Services Agency is not responsible.

Crown Suppliers

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set out the annual sales and numbers employed by the Crown Suppliers for each of the past five years.

Sir George Young: This information is included in the Crown Suppliers' annual report and accounts for 1984-85, a copy of which is placed in the House of Commons Library. The details are as follows:

	1980-81 £000	1981-82 £000	1982-83 £000	1983-84 £000	1984-85 £000
Sales	207,290	205,138	220,960	228,329	240,315
Staff numbers in post at 31 March	3,007	2,134	1,981	1,980	1,933

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set out the names of the review team considering the future of the Crown Suppliers and the sources of external expert advice.

Sir George Young: The members of the review team were:

Miss B. C. Turton, Cabinet Office
Mr. A. A. Carter, Cabinet Office
Mr. R. J. Meadows, Her Majesty's Treasury
Mr. N. L. Gregory, The Crown Suppliers
Mr. P. S. Mundy, The Crown Suppliers

During the course of the review, the team obtained external advice from 10 private sector firms which are suppliers to the Crown Suppliers, 10 public sector organisations which are customers, and three major private sector organisations which have large purchasing departments.

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to receive the report of the review team considering the future of the Crown Suppliers.

Sir George Young: The report was sent to my right hon. Friend on 11 November.

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what consultations have been held with the staff of the Crown Suppliers as part of the review of the organisation's future; and what response they have made.

Sir George Young: During the review, the team consulted the Departmental Whitley council trade union side and the joint consultative committee trade union side. The former submitted a paper to the team.

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many (a) nationalised industries, (b) local authorities and (c) other public sector bodies are currently customers of the Crown Suppliers.

Sir George Young: The Crown Suppliers have provided goods and services during the last year to 14 nationalised industries, 83 local authorities and 550 other public sector customers, in addition to their main business with central Government Departments.

Fire Precautions Act 1971

Mr. Knox asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what consultations have taken place on possible amendments to the Fire Precautions Act 1971; and what representations he has received on fire safety in houses in multiple occupation.

Sir George Young: Since my Department consulted local authority associations and other interested organisations in September 1983 about a possible extension of the Housing (Means of Escape from Fire in Houses in Multiple Occupation) Order 1981 (SI 1981 No 1576), my right hon. Friend has received a number of representaions about fire safety. These were mainly inquiries about when an announcement would be made on the review of the 1981 order and representations about the fire which took place in November 1984 at 46 Gloucester place, London, W1. The Fire Precautions Act 1971, and the possibility of any amendments to that Act, are matters for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department.

Supplementary Capital Expenditure

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the maximum supplementary capital expenditure allocation given to a non-metropolitan district council in 1985-86.

Mrs. Rumbold: The largest supplementary expenditure allocation given to a non-metropolitan district council for 1985-86 was £842,000. Supplementary allocations, issued to qualifying authorities, were calculated as an amount equal to 5 per cent. of an authority's basic capital allocation for 1985-86.

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has received an application from Portsmouth city council for supplementary capital expenditure for the year 1986-87; and whether he anticipates it will be eligible.

Mrs. Rumbold: The basic capital expenditure allocations to individual authorities for 1986-87 have not yet been decided. Nor have I received any application from Portsmouth city council for a supplementary capital expenditure allocation in respect of that year, although the council has been given a supplementary allocation for 1985-86.

Housing Capital

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list, in ranking order, the 50 local authorities with the largest housing capital programmes in 1984-85 and 1985-86 showing the figures for each authority.

Mr. John Patten: The information requested is shown in the following tables:—

Paint (Lead Content)

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will introduce legislation to establish maximum permitted levels of lead in paint (a) generally and (b) when used on equipment intended for outdoor playgrounds.

Mrs. Rumbold: No. In February 1985, the Paintmakers Association of Great Britain, whose member companies account for 90 per cent. of United Kingdom paint manufacturers, agreed to stop adding lead to white gloss, undercoat and primers for decorative use from January 1986; and to all other decorative paints and varnishes from July 1987. Paint with no added lead will be labelled appropriately. Further action can take place only in the framework of the European Community, and at the United Kingdom's instigation the Commission is now considering ways to encourage the manufacture and sale of unleaded paint.

Department of the Environment circular 22/82 (Welsh Office circular 31/82) advised local authorities to specify low-lead paint for almost all uses, including metalwork in recreation grounds. An information note, "Lead in Paintwork", published by the Department in 1982, gave advice on surveying and treating old paintwork. In consultation with the Department, the local authorities management services and computer committee (LAMSAC) issued further advice last year on the treatment of playground equipment.

Nature Conservancy Council

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all the grants given by the Nature Conservancy Council towards the purchase of sites of special scientific interest land by voluntary conservationists in the current financial year; if he will express this grant as a percentage of the total price paid where this is known; and if he will make a statement as to the role of such grants in the Nature Conservancy Council's work.

Mrs. Rumbold: Grants given by the Nature Conservancy Council to voluntary conservationists for the purchase of SSSI land since 1 April 1985 are as follows:

Body	Site name	Grant paid	Per cent. of purchase price
Northants Trust	High Wood and Meadow	10,000	25
RSPB	West Sedgemoor	16,000	25
Somerset Trust	Beer and Aller Wood	5,375	25
RSPB	Ouse Washes	1,188	25
Berks, Bucks and Oxon	Oulsmoor Bog	8,750	25
Hereford and Radnor	Upperhugg Meadow	1,640	25
Somerset Trust	Tealham and Tadham	5,250	25
North York Moors National Park Committee	Lewisham Woods	12,500	25
Woodland Trust	America Wood	5,000	25
Gloucester Trust	Coombe Hill Canal	4,750	25
Montgomery Trust	Roundton Hill	7,750	33⅓
Hereford and Radnor	Upper Lugg Meadow	595	25
RSPB	Allt Pu Farm	16,000	25
Norfolk Trust	Narborough Embankment	7,250	25
Northants Trust	Wansford Pasture	3,666	33⅓
Yorks Wildlife Trust	Sutton Ings	1,913	25
Somerset Trust	Tealham and Tadham	4,050	25
Notts Trust	Teversal Pastures	2,250	33⅓
RSPB	Ouse Washes	6,156	25
Leics and Rutland Trust	Orchid Meadows	11,893	33⅓
Scottish Wildlife Trust	Whitlaw Wood	500	25
Scottish Wildlife Trust	Woodhall Dean	8,500	50
Scottish Wildlife Trust	Coilsholm Wood	950	25
Kent Trust	Stonelees	8,000	50

Under arrangements operating since 1 April 1985 SSSI land attracts grant of 33⅓ per cent., and key sites of 50 per cent.

The list above includes details of those grants offered under previous arrangements and paid in the current financial year.

By assisting the voluntary conservation movement by way of grants, the Nature Conservancy Council will secure conservation protection of a substantial number of important nature conservation sites. They will continue with their programme of assistance as a viable alternative to NCC acquiring the land itself.

Co-operative Housing Developments

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will allocate funds to promote co-operative housing developments in areas where none exist.

Mr. John Patten: The allocation of funds to individual registered housing co-operatives or their projects is a matter for the Housing Corporation, or local authorities, within the resources available to them. However my Department's urban housing renewal unit is currently examining ways in which we could encourage the greater diversification of housing tenures, through housing co-operatives for example, in order to help to revitalise rundown council estates.

Housing Subsidy

Mr. Ashby asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he proposes to issue to the local authority associations consultation papers on housing subsidy for 1986-87.

Mr. John Patten: My right hon. Friends the Secretary of State and Secretary of State for Wales have issued consultation papers today. The first concerns the Government's proposals for calculating the increase in the amount of the local contribution which local authorities will be expected to find from local sources in arriving at their entitlement to housing subsidy for 1986-87. The second concerns the amount of management and maintenance expenditure to be treated as reckonable for housing subsidy purposes in 1986-87. Copies of the papers have been placed in the Vote Office and in the Libraries of both Houses.

Rent Act 1977

Sir Hugh Rossi asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any proposals to amend the Rent Act 1977, section 12(1) and schedule 2(2) so as to put right anomalies which have arisen regarding the status of resident landlords who hold their legal estate as joint tenants.

Sir George Young: This is an issue which we shall consider when a suitable legislative opportunity occurs.

EMPLOYMENT

Labour Statistics

Mr. Skinner asked the Paymaster General what is the level of (a) male and (b) female unemployment in Derbyshire at the latest available date.

Mr. Alan Clark: The following information is in the Library. On 10 October 1985 the number of unemployed male and female claimants in Derbyshire was 32,867 and 15,925 respectively.

Mr. Skinner asked the Paymaster General what is the level of unemployment in Derbyshire for 16 to 18-year-olds and 19 to 21-year-olds at the latest available date.

Mr. Alan Clark: The following information is in the Library. On 10 October 1985 the number of unemployed claimants in the county of Derbyshire aged under 19 years and aged 19 to 24 years was 6,139 and 12,055 respectively. Separate figures are not available for those aged 19 to 21.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Paymaster General if he will list the net changes in employment by regional area from December 1982 after making allowance for second jobs.

Mr. Alan Clark: The following table gives the net changes in the civilian employed labour force between December 1982 and June 1985, the latest date for which figures are available, for the areas specified. The civilian employed labour force is the sum of employees in employment and the self-employed. Estimates of the self-employed after June 1984 are provisional.

The second jobs included in the employees in employment estimates are not separately identified, but estimates from the labour force surveys suggest an increase of 60,000 between spring 1983 and spring 1984 (the latest date for which estimates are available) in the number of people with a second job as an employee. The survey sample is not large enough to give reliable estimates on a regional basis.

The employment estimates do not include second jobs when they are held as self-employed.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Paymaster General if he will list the net charrges in service sector employment by regional area from June 1979 to June 1985; and if he will also publish the figures for December 1982.

Mr. Alan Clark: The following table gives the net changes in the numbers of employees in employment in the service industries between June 1979 and June 1985 for the areas specified. The table also gives the estimated numbers of employees in employment in the service industries at December 1982 for the same areas.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Paymaster General if he will publish a table showing the net losses in full-time employment for men and women by each regional area and for Great Britain as a whole from June 1979 to June 1985.

Mr. Alan Clark: The following table gives the net changes in the numbers of male employees in employment and female full-time employees in employment between June 1979 and June 1985, for the areas specified. Estimates of full-time and part-time male employees are not separately available for these dates.

Mr. Sean Hughes asked the Paymaster General what is the number of men, women and young people, respectively, who have been unemployed for more than a year, two years, three years and four years, respectively, in Knowsley, South.

Mr. Alan Clark: The following information is in the Library. The table shows the requested information in respect of unemployed claimants as at 10 October 1985.

Duration of unemployment

	Over one year	Over two years	Over three years	Over four years
Knowsley South parliamentary constituency
Male	4,226	3,046	2,255	1,571
Female	1,158	640	402	248
Aged under 18 years	82	0	0	0

Mr. Sean Hughes asked the Paymaster General what is the number of job vacancies in Knowsley, South.

Mr. Alan Clark: The following information is in the Library. On 4 October 1985 there were 118 unfilled vacancies in the area covered by the Huyton and Prescot jobcentres, which closely corresponds to the knowsley, South parliamentary constituency.

Mr. Sean Hughes asked the Paymaster General what is the number unemployed and the job vacancies in each occupation in Knowsley, South.

Mr. Alan Clark: The following information is in the Library. On 10 October 1985, the number of unemployed claimants in the parliamentary constituency of Knowsley, South was 10,396.

The number of unfilled vacancies in the main occupational groups at 6 September 1985 is given in the following table for the Huyton and Prescot jobcentres, which closely corresponds to the Knowsley, South parliamentary constituency. More detailed occupational analyses of vacancies are available in the Library.

Unfilled vacancies at September 1985

Huyton and Prescot jobcentres
Managerial and professional	20
Clerical and related	34
Other Non-manual occupations	26
Craft and similar occupations	19
General labourers	0
Other manual occupations	36
Total	135

Mr. Sean Hughes asked the Paymaster General how many jobs have been lost from 1979 to date in Knowsley, South.

Mr. Alan Clark: Information about job losses is not available from the Department's statistics. Net changes in employment can be given but, for areas smaller than regions, only for those dates when censuses of employment are taken.

The latest available information is from the June 1978 and the following September 1981 census of employment. In that period the number of employees employed in the area covered by the jobcentre areas of Huyton, Garston, Prescot and Widnes, which corresponds most closely to the constituency of Knowsley, South, fell by 17,600. However, the boundary of the Garston jobcentre area changed between 1978 and 1981 decreasing the size of the area. Otherwise the fall in the level of employment would have been approximately 7,600 fewer.

Engineering Industry

Mr. Skinner asked the Paymaster General how many persons were employed in the engineering industry in the east midlands in 1979, 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983, 1984 and the nearest available date in 1985.

Mr. Alan Clark: The following table gives, for June of each of the years specified, the estimated number of employees in employment in the metal goods, engineering and vehicles industries (division 3 of the 1980 standard industrial classification) in the east midlands. Regional estimates of employees in employment for these dates are not separately available for the engineering industry.

	Number
1979	236,000
1980	230,000
1981	212,000
1982	203,000
1983	190,000
1984	187,000
1985	186,000

Regional estimates of employees in employment in the engineering industry are available from the September 1981 census of employment, at which time the figures for the east midlands were as follows:

	Number
Mechanical engineering (class 32*)	86,700
Electrical and electronic engineering (class 34*)	37,200
Instrument engineering (class 37*)	3,500

* 1980 standard industrial classification

Sunday Trading

Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Paymaster General if he will estimate the employment implications for the small retail sector of the deregulation of Sunday trading.

Mr. Trippier: The Auld committee of inquiry asked the Institute of Fiscal Studies to examine the economic implications of deregulation for retailing as a whole. The report by IFS suggests that over a 15-year period up to 20,000 full-time equivalent jobs could be lost. There are, however, reasons to believe that this assessment may prove to be pessimistic. For example, it assumes no increase in sales. But many retailers expect an increase. If this happened, deregulation could lead to an increase in jobs; for example, the IFS also estimated that a 2 per cent. increase in sales would generate an additional 22,000 full-time equivalent jobs.

Construction Industry

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will take steps to require the construction industry training board to keep ethnic records of those in training.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Government do not require industrial training boards to keep records of the ethnic origin of trainees. Such matters are primarily for the boards themselves to decide.

In its role as a managing agent, the construction industry training board notifies the Manpower Services Commission of the ethnic origins of trainees recruited to its youth training scheme.

There is no formal requirement for employers or training bodies to undertake ethnic monitoring. However the Commission for Racial Equality's code of practice, which does not extend the law, recommends that employers monitor the effects of selection decisions and personnel practices and procedures in order to assess whether equal opportunity is being achieved. The code leaves it to individual employers to determine how this might be done.

Visual Display Units

Mr. Hancock asked the Paymaster General what studies have been made to assess the possible effects of visual display units on their operators.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Community Programme

Mr. Hancock asked the Paymaster General how many jobs have been offered to unemployed citizens in Portsmouth and Hampshire, respectively, on the community programme.

Mr. Alan Clark: Forty-one thousand, nine hundred and five people have entered the community programme in the south east region since it started in October 1982. Three thousand, six hundred and fifty of them were in the Hampshire and Isle of Wight area. A separate breakdown for Portsmouth and Hampshire is not available.

Self-employed Persons

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Paymaster General how he calculates the regional figures for the net changes in the numbers of self-employed since December 1982.

Mr. Alan Clark: Estimates of self-employment, both national and regional, are obtained from the Censuses of Population, the latest of which was held in 1981, updated to June 1983 and June 1984 by applying proportionate changes as estimated from labour force surveys. Estimates for periods between June 1981 and June 1984 are derived by interpolating between the estimates for June 1981, June 1983 and June 1984. Provisional estimates for dates since June 1984, which will be reviewed when the 1985 labour force survey data become available next year, incorporate the assumption that the average rate of change between 1981 and 1984 is continuing.

Estimated net changes in the numbers of self-employed since December 1982 are calculated by subtracting estimates for that date from those for the later date specified.

Job Creation

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Paymaster General if he will estimate the number of additional jobs created in (a) development areas and (b) intermediate areas for (i) all employees, (ii) part-time employees and (iii) the self-employed, from December 1982 to the most recent date for which figures are available; and how many of these additional jobs are second jobs.

Mr. Alan Clark: I regret that the information requested is not available from the Department's statistics.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Paymaster General if he will estimate for each regional area the number of second jobs created since December 1982.

Mr. Alan Clark: Estimates from labour force surveys suggest that the number of people in Great Britain with a second job, either self-employed or as an employee, increased by some 150,000 between spring 1983 and spring 1984. The sample size is not sufficiently large to provide estimates by region.

Mossmorran Fire (Report)

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Paymaster General if he will agree to place the report now being compiled by the Health and Safety Executive on the fire at Mossmorran on 2 November in the Library.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: A fire at the Essochem Olefins Inc plant at Mossmorran, Fife on 2 November 1985 was investigated by Her Majesty's Inspector of Factories on 3 November 1985. No one was injured and there was no risk to the public. A formal report is not being published. I shall write to the hon. Member about the matter and will place a copy of my letter in the Library.

SCOTLAND

Rural Initiative and Development Scheme

Mr. Bruce asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what is the total value of assistance approved under the programme for rural initiatives and development scheme;

(2) how many applications for financial assistance have been received under the programme for rural initiatives and development scheme;

(3) how many applications for financial assistance have been accepted under the programme for rural initiatives and development scheme.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Of 46 applications received by the Scottish Development Agency, eight, involving offers of £292,850, have so far been approved.

Ambulancemen (Pay)

Mr. Steel asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the criteria used to determine the timing of the 1986 pay rise for Scottish ambulancemen.

Mr. George Younger: Under an offer made by the management side of the ambulance Whitley council as part of the 1985 round of pay negotiations ambulancemen's pay in 1986 will be affected by a salary restructuring, to be implemented in March 1986 in England and Wales and September 1986 in Scotland. Because average earnings in Scotland are at present substantially lower than in England and Wales, the restructuring will give Scottish ambulancemen a significant increase in earnings, bringing them up to the national average. To allow time for the management of the Scottish ambulance service to accommodate the costs of this and to seek efficiency savings, the management side offered a later operative date in Scotland than in England and Wales.

Pay in 1986 for ambulancemen and women will be negotiated within the ambulance Whitley council in the normal way. The negotiations cannot begin until the consultations which the staff side is currently undertaking with its membership on the restructuring offer are completed and a settlement on the 1985 negotiations has been reached.

AIDS

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what cash is specifically earmarked to each of the haemophiliac reference centres to deal with acquired immune deficiency syndrome; how much cash is set aside for personal counselling; and if he will make a statement on the contribution of social work services to the reference centres.

Mr. John MacKay: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total cash currently available in Scotland to deal with acquired immune deficiency syndrome; how this is allocated; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: The cost of treating patients suffering from acquired immune deficiency syndrome is met by health boards from their existing resources. In addition the following specific items are being funded centrally:

(1) Purchase of screening kits by the Scottish national blood transfusion service	322,000
(2) Research projects on AIDS	125,000
(3) Confirmatory AIDS antibody testing at the virology reference laboratory, Ruchill hospital, Glasgow and the clinical virology laboratory, Edinburgh University	52,000
(4) Grant to Scottish AIDS monitor:
Annual grant	6,000
Capital grant	1,000
(5) Courses for AIDS counsellors	1,500

Lithotripters

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if consideration is being given to the possibility of lithotripters being installed in hospitals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: I am considering the case for lithotripter treatment to be provided in Scotland. There are clinical and cost issues involved which preclude an immediate decision.

Diploma in Legal Practice

Mr. Ewing asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many students obtaining a place on the diploma in legal practice course at the five Scottish law colleges have been given a grant and how many have been refused.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Awards under the Scottish Education Department's postgraduate students' allowances scheme have been offered to 402 students selected by a co-ordinating committee comprising the university law faculties, the Law Society of Scotland, and the Faculty of Advocates, for assistance in respect of courses leading to the diploma in legal practice at Scottish universities. Applications from a further eight students selected by the committee are still awaited. Eight students selected by the committee have been refused award because they failed to meet conditions relating to residence or previous study. Applications are not accepted by the Department from students who fail to be selected by the co-ordinating committee, and information is not available on the numbers of students in that category.

Mr. Ewing asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many students in the five Scottish law colleges have been unable to obtain a place on the diploma in legal practice course.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The allocation of places on courses leading to the diploma in legal practice is a matter for the universities which provide such courses. My right hon. Friend has no responsibility for the universities and does not have the information requested.

Students (National Certificates)

Mr. Ewing asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will discuss with the Scottish Certificate of Technical and Vocational Education council the possibility of all students who have completed the action plan modules receiving their national certificate at an early date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I understand that data received by the Scottish Vocational Education council until the end of October have now been processed and that outstanding certificates, for which fees have been paid, are in course of being issued. I hope that any delays experienced can be put down to teething troubles in the first year of operation of the new certificate.

Mr. Ewing: asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if, in the light of the number of students in Scotland who have completed the action plan modules who are now being asked by the Scottish Certificate of Technical and Vocational Education Council to pay sums of up to £40 before that body will issue their national certificate, he will take steps to meet the cost from central funds;

(2) how many students in Scotland who have completed the action plan modules have not received their national certificate because they claim they cannot afford to pay the module fee.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The intention to charge a fee per module was announced by SCOTEC and SCOTBEC (the predecessors of the Scottish Vocational Education council) in their letter of 10 June 1984 to education authorities and colleges. Responsibility for the funding of SCOTVEC rests, in the main, with regional and islands councils in Scotland and, following discussions with the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities, agreement was reached upon a fee of £2 per module. Arrangements have been made by SCOTVEC with regional and islands councils and the Manpower Services Commission for payment of fees in respect of students under the age of 18 and those undertaking the national certificate as part of their youth training scheme programme in academic session 1984-85. SCOTVEC has written to students over the age of 18 requesting payment of outstanding fees before their certificates are issued. I see no case for meeting these fees from central funds. I have no information on the hon. Member's second question.

Student Grants

Mr. Ewing asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he now intends to abandon his review of student grants.

Mr. Allan Stewart: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Science announced on 12 November at column 113 that he had concluded that no useful purpose would be served by the publication of a consultative document about student support. My right hon. Friend was fully involved in that decision, and does not propose to undertake separate consultations in Scotland.

Children at Risk

Mr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what guidelines the Scottish Home and Health Department issues to social work departments concerning the detection of non-accidental injuries and the defence of children at risk of such injuries.

Mr. John MacKay: A joint circular on non-accidental injury to children was issued by Social Work Services Group and the Scottish Home and Health Department to social work departments and health boards in 1982. It consolidated earlier guidance, gave advice on the use of register systems, underlined the need for continuous review of procedural arrangements and professional practice and emphasised the need for inter-professional and inter-agency co-operation in detecting and handling cases.

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what training trainee social workers on certificate of qualification in social work courses in Scotland receive in the detection of non-accidental injuries and the protection of children at risk of such injuries.

Mr. John MacKay: The Central Council for education and training in social work has statutory responsibility throughout the United Kingdom for the promotion of education and training in all aspects of social work, and for the approval of courses leading to the award of the council's certificate of qualification in social work. There is no nationally set syllabus for such courses.

I understand, however, that courses contain specific teaching on work with children and families, and the relevant legislation. Most students will also gain some experience in these areas on practical placement.

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what in-service training courses are provided in Scotland for social workers to be trained in the detection of non-accidental injuries and the protection of children at risk of such injuries.

Mr. John MacKay: Detailed information on in-service training courses for social workers in Scotland is not held centrally. I understand that such training is generally provided by social work authorities, or arranged by them according to their needs.

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what training is given to residential social workers in Scotland in the identification of non-accidental injuries and the protection of children at risk of such injuries.

Mr. John MacKay: The training of residential social workers in particular aspects of their work is a matter for their employers. Detailed information is not held centrally.

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many children were placed on social work department at risk registers in Scotland in each of the past five years; and if he will provide a breakdown of the figures in terms of regional and island council areas.

Mr. John MacKay: This information is not collected centrally. Each region maintains its own record of children who have been the victims of child abuse or who are thought to be at risk of such abuse.

Company Failures (Dundee)

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many companies have ceased operations in Dundee each year since May 1979; how many jobs have been lost; how many firms have notified intended redundancies; and how many jobs are involved.

Mr. Allan Stewart [pursuant to his reply, 14 November 1985, c. 256]: There are no comprehensive statistics on redundancies and closures. The table below gives information on the number of redundancies and closures affecting 10 or more workers notified to the Manpower Services Commission as due to occur in the Dundee jobcentre area during the period May 1979 to September 1985. During the same period 380 advance notifications of redundancy were received, involving 22,165 redundancies.

British Geological Survey (Scotland)

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans exist for the future development of the British Geological Survey (Scotland); and if he intends to increase the number of Scottish Office projects given to the organisation.

Mrs. Rumbold: I have been asked to reply.

The British Geological Survey in Scotland and England is a component institute of the Natural Environme nt Research Council (NERC) and the future development of the survey is a matter for that council. NERC has recently published a corporate plan which outlines a strategy for the earth sciences and is itself conducting a joint study with the advisory board for the research councils on United Kingdom needs for a geological survey.

The Department of the Environment prepares an annual geological research programme in consultation with SDD and other agencies. When a requirement for geological research arises in Scotland, BGS will be invited to bid for the work provided it possesses the appropriate skills and resources.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Civil Servants (Pensions)

Mr. Andrew Bowden asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has made an assessment of the cost of adjusting the pension of those civil servants who retired during the years 1976 to 1979 to a level comparable with the pension of civil servants who retired after 1979; if the Government have any plans for making such an adjustment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: The cost of uprating the pensions of civil servants who retired in the period 1976 to 1979, to a level comparable with the pension of civil servants who retired with the full benefits of the 1 April 1979 pay increase, would be about £8 million annually. But the incomes policy of those years applied generally, and it is not therefore a matter of adjusting the pensions only of civil servants. The cost of suitably uprating the pensions of all those in public service pension schemes who retired in the period has been assessed at £30 million annually.

These pensions are fully protected agaist price inflation. Moreover, the relationship between the value of newly awarded pensions, calculated from earnings (pensionable pay), and that of pensions in payment, uprated in relation to prices, cannot remain constant. Taking account of the cost involved, and other demands on public expenditure, the Government have no plans to make an adjustment.

Stamp Duty

Mr. Maples asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer, what is the estimated yield in the current financial year of stamp duty at 1 per cent. on (a) transfer of private dwellings and (b) transfer of securities.

Mr. Moore: Estimates are as follows:—
(a) transfer of residential property £360 million
(b) transfer of stocks and shares £500 million

Business Expansion Scheme

Dr. McDonald asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects the report by Peat Marwick Mitchell and Co. on the effectiveness of the business expansion scheme to be completed; and if he will publish its findings.

Mr. Moore: We have received the report. Its findings will be published in due course.

Income Tax

Dr. McDonald asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the cost in the 1986-87 financial year of introducing a reduced rate band of 25p of income tax on (i) the first £750 of taxable income, (ii) the first £1,000 of taxable income and (iii) the first £1,500 of taxable income; and in each case, what would be the impact on the net income of a married man on half average earnings, three-quarters average earnings, average earnings, twice average earnings, five times average earnings and 10 times average earnings.

Mr. Moore: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Non-industrial Civil Servants

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing, for the years 1978 to 1984, the charge to the Civil Service Superannuation Vote arising from non-industrial civil servants taking early retirement or being made redundant; and if he will give bibliographical references to the published sources used.

Mr. Brooke: Detailed costs are not readily available. I shall write to the hon. Member shortly with the information that we have.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he can identify the per capita cost of (i) early retirement and (ii) redundancy in the non-industrial Civil Service, for the years 1978 to 1984; and how the Government calculate whether any proposal to substitute contracted labour for Civil Service manpower will be cost-effective after taking account of the transitional expenses.

Mr. Brooke: Detailed costs are not readily available. I shall write to the hon. Member shortly with the information that we have.

It is Government policy to transfer work out of Government Departments whenever this is commensurate with sound management and good value for money for the taxpayer. Departments have been advised that, when considering contracting out a service to the private sector, they should compare out-house and in-house costs taking into account all costs to the Exchequer. These include transitional superannuation and redundancy costs in addition to contractors' charges and administrative costs. They are also advised to consider the problems that might arise if they become tied to a monopoly supplier.

THE ARTS

Tyne Wear Theatre Company

Mr. Nicholas Brown asked the Minister for the Arts, what discussions he has had with the Tyne Wear Theatre Company concerning funding after the abolition of the Tyne and Wear county council.

Mr. Luce: It will be for the Arts Council, the regional arts association and successor authorities to decide on the specific allocation of funds after abolition. I refer the hon. Member to my statement of 14 November 1985 at columns 700-710, when I announced that the Arts Council would be receiving a grant of £25 million in 1986-87 towards the funding of arts bodies in the areas presently covered by the GLC and the metropolitan counties.

CIVIL SERVICE

Retirements and Redundancies

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Minister for the Civil Service (1) if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for the calendar years 1978 to 1984 the number of early retirements, distinguishing those which are due to ill-health, from the industrial Civil Service, identifying the cost to the Civil Service Superannuation Vote, and giving biblographical references to any published sources used;

(2) if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for the calendar years 1978 to 1984 the number of industrial Civil Servants made redundant in (i) the Civil Service, (ii) the Ministry of Defence and (iii) the royal Dockyards, indicating the total and per capita cost to public funds and giving bibliographical references to any published sources used.

Mr. Luce: The information requested is not readily available. I shall write to the hon. Member shortly with the information available.

SOCIAL SERVICES

One-Parent Families

Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what information he has concerning the numbers of children under the age of 16 years currently being raised in one-parent families; and how this figure compares with that in the previous 10 years for which figures are available;

(2) what information he has concerning the percentage of all children under 16 years of age who are currently being reared in one-parent families; and how this figure compares with those in the previous 10 years for which figures are available.

Mr. Whitney: Information from the general household survey indicates that in the period 1981 to 1983 about 12 per cent. of dependent children, most of whom are under age 16, were living in one-parent families; the proportion a decade earlier was about 8 percent., the figure having risen fairly steadily over the intervening decade. These results, applied to population estimates, suggest that around the year 1982 approximately 1·4 million children under the age of 16 were living in one-parent families as compared to 1·1 million a decade earlier.

Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has concerning the numbers and percentages of single families where that parent is male.

Mr. Whitney: It is estimated that in the period 1981 to 1983 about 100,000 families, or just over 10 per cent of all one-parent families, were headed by a lone father.

Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what specific measures have been introduced by his Department to give support to one-parent families in which the father is the responsible parent.

Mr. Newton: One-parent benefit, and the particular help provided for one parent families through the supplementary benefit and family income supplement schemes are available to both lone fathers and lone mothers.

Lithotripters

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many lithotripters are currently in operation; where they are situated; and which health authority areas they cover.

Mr. Whitney: There are at present two lithotripters in England. One, at St. Thomas' hospital in London, is a joint venture with BUPA and 75 per cent. of the treatment is allocated to National Health Service patients. The service is being evaluated to determine the best use of the machine in treating renal calculi and to provide guidance on the number of such machines needed to deal with the potential national patient load. Patients are not restricted to those from particular health authorities.

The second unit is in the private sector, at the Devonshire hospital in London. I understand that some health authorities have made arrangements for National Health Service patients to be treated there but no details are held centrally.

Board and Lodging Allowance

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what will be the maximum amount that can be paid to a homeless 16-year-old with no dependants, who is claiming board and lodging allowance in (a) London, (b) Manchester, (c) Norwich and (d) Cromer and who is receiving unemployment benefit or supplementary benefit, laundry allowance and any other allowances to which he is entitled after the proposed changes as outlined in his Department's publication "Supplementary Benefit Board and Lodging Areas, Second Edition."

Mr. Newton: The supplementary benefit requirements of a single adult boarder are the amount of his boarding charge, subject to a limit, plus a personal expenses allowance of £9·25 (or £10·30 at the long-term rate). The limits prescribed in the publication "Supplementary Benefit Maximum Amounts, Initial Periods and Board and Lodging Areas" for (a) London, (b) Manchester, (c) Norwich and (d) Cromer are (a) £70, (b) £55, (c) £60 and (d) £60. In addition, according to his circumstances, a boarder can qualify for additional requirements as prescribed in schedule 4 to the Supplementary Benefit (Requirements) Regulations 1983 (SI 1983 No. 1399) but only to the extent that the items are not included in his boarding charge. In the case of laundry the amount would be the actual expenditure incurred less 50 pence.

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services why, in view of the fact that of the 1,170 claims examined in the Euston board and lodging area, 55 per cent. of claimants were found not to be resident at the hotel stated in their claim forms, only 10 claimants were prosecuted.

Mr. Newton: The cases were examined to establish how many claimants in the Euston area had moved during the currency of their claims without giving notice of change of address. In all cases where claimants were found to have moved, benefit payments were stopped immediately. Continued inquiries are being made into the whereabouts and benefit entitlement of the missing claimants, and so far 13 prosecutions have been brought. My right hon. Friend has indicated that the Department will, in the light of evidence in this and other cases, step up its action to deal with this kind of abuse of the system.

Benefit Claims (Cosham)

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the current weekly rate of applications for each of the principal benefits at his Department's office at Roebuck house, Cosham, Portsmouth; and how this compares with the position one and two years ago.

Mr. Major: The table shows the average weekly rate of claims made for principal benefits during October 1985, 1984 and 1983 at the Department's office in Portsmouth.

Benefit	Average weekly claims
	October 1983	October 1984	October 1985
Sickness-invalidity benefit	61	58	48
Maternity allowance	50	44	33
Retirement pension	387	280	372
Widows benefit	4	6	4
Death grant	46	48	40
Industrial disablement benefit	nil	nil	nil
Supplementary benefit	444	438	500

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the number of current payments of each of the principal benefits being made at his Department's office at Roebuck house, Cosham, Portsmouth; and how this compares with the position one and two years ago.

Mr. Major: The table shows the number of payments made to claimants by the Department's office at Portsmouth during the four week period ending 22 October 1985 — the latest available figures — and for the same period one and two years ago.

	1983	1984	1985
Girocheques
Supplementary benefit	3,033	3,677	3,823

	1983	1984	1985
Short-term benefit	4,701	5,831	7,942
Long-term benefit		6,590	2,581
Order books
Supplementary benefit
Combined retirement and supplementary pension	1,620	1,331	1,210
Supplementary allowance	1,340	1,550	1,434
Short-term benefit	546	729	555
Long-term benefit

Notes:

1. The above figures do not include payments of supplementary benefit made through unemployment benefit offices.
2. Short-term benefit includes sickness and invalidity benefit, maternity allowance and severe disablement benefit. Long-term benefit includes retirement pension, widows pension, industrial disablement benefit and death grants.
3. Separate figures for short and long-term benefit girocheques were not kept before 1984 and separate figures for order book issues are not available.

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is currently the average time taken by his Department's office at Roebuck house, Cosham, Portsmouth, to process new claims for single payments; and how this compares with the position one and two years ago.

Mr. Major: Claims for single payments are determined as soon as possible after all the information required has been collected. A limited sample of recent cases at Portsmouth local office suggests that, on average, claims for single payments are currently being determined 10 days after their receipt, similar figures for 1984 and 1983 are not available.

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is currently the average time taken to deal with new benefit claims from (a) householders and (b) non-householders at his Department's office at Roebuck house, Cosham, Portsmouth; and how this compares with the position one and two years ago.

Mr. Major: Information is not available in the form requested. The latest figures show that the average time taken to deal with all new supplementary benefit claims at the Department's office in Portsmouth is 7 days, compared with 6 days at the same time last year and 5 days the year before.

Children at Risk

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many children were placed on social work department at risk registers in each of the past five years; and if he will provide a breakdown of the figures by local authorities.

Mr. Whitney: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend, the Member for Dorset, North (Mr. Baker) on 12 November at column 158.

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what guidelines he issues concerning the detection of non-accidental injuries and the protection of children at risk of such injuries.

Mr. Whitney: The Department has issued a number of guidance circulars on child abuse to local authorities, health authorities and other agencies concerned with children and their families. This guidance, which is aimed at promoting a co-ordinated professional approach to the problem, is currently being thoroughly revised and we intend to issue a consultative paper early next year.

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what training is included in his Department's certificate of qualification in social work courses regarding the detection of non-accidental injuries and the safeguarding of children at risk of such injuries;

(2) what training residential social workers receive in the identification of non-accidental injuries and the protection of children at risk of such injuries.

Mr. Whitney: I shall let the hon. Member have replies as soon as possible.

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what training student doctors undertake during their medical studies in the detection and treatment of non-accidental injuries and the treatment of children at risk of such injuries.

Mr. Hayhoe: Under the Medical Act 1983, responsibility for the medical undergraduate curriculum is with universities within the framework laid down by the General Medical Council. I understand that the current GMC recommendations on medical education stress the importance of wide clinical experience for medical students including child health and paediatrics.

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what in-service training courses are provided for general practitioners regarding the detection of non-accidental injuries and the treatment of children at risk of such injuries.

Mr. Hayhoe: There is a wide range of courses under section 63 of the Health Service and Public Health Act 1968 dealing specifically with child abuse and the wider aspects of family care. Also multidisciplinary courses are provided by public and voluntary agencies which general practitioners can attend.

Benefit Expenditure (Uprating)

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the estimated effect on total benefit expenditure, excluding administration costs, between July 1986 and April 1987, of uprating benefits in July 1986 instead of November 1986.

Mr. Newton: On the assumption in the Chancellor's autumn statement that the movement in prices over the eight months to January 1986 would be of the order of 1 per cent., the July 1986 uprating will add some £270 million to benefit expenditure by the end of the financial year 1986-87. An estimate of expenditure had the uprating taken place in November instead will not be available until the retail prices index for May 1986 is published.

Schoolchildren (Dietary Survey)

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to publish the costs of the dieting survey of schoolchildren referred to in his reply of 17 December 1984 to the hon. Member for Dunfermline, East (Mr. Brown) Official Report, columns 49-50, as expected to be available in spring 1985.

Mr. Whitney: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Speech Therapy

Mr. Rowe asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will list such information as is available to him as to which institutions in the National Health Service offers courses leading to an honours degree in speech science, speech pathology or speech therapy;

(2) if he will list such information as is available to him, by National Health Service institution, as to the numbers of staff engaged in full or part-time teaching on courses leading to an honours degree in speech science, speech pathology or speech therapy; and if he will give any information he has as to whether their contracts are with the National Health Service or with some other employer;

(3) if he will list such information as is available to him, by institution within the National Health Service, as to the number of students currently sitting examinations for an honours degree in speech science, speech pathology or speech therapy.

Mr. Whitney: I shall let my hon. Friend have replies as soon as possible.

Liver Transplants

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what change there has been in the resources devoted to liver transplant work in the National Health Service over the last two years for which figures are available.

Mr. Whitney [pursuant to his reply, 19 November 1985, c. 164]: I regret that there was a typing error in my reply. The funds allocated under the supra regional arrangements for 1985-86 should enable about 75 operations to be performed.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Pupil Expenditure

Mr. Radice asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what has been the change in expenditure per pupil in real terms between 1979-80 and 1984-85 for primary school and for secondary schools.

Sir Keith Joseph: It is estimated that the net institutional expenditure per pupil of local education authorities in England increased by 16 per cent. in real terms between 1979-80 and 1984-85, in both primary and secondary schools. The gross domestic product (market prices) deflator was used to bring expenditure to a common price base for this calculation. The figures for 1984-85 are drawn from the estimates published by the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy.

Colleges of Higher Education

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science on what grounds Her Majesty's Government decided on the sum of £657 million for colleges of higher education during the next academic year.

Mr. Walden: Following consultation with the local authority associations, my right hon. Friend determined the quantum of advanced further education expenditure within the pre-determined pool in England in 1986-87 at £661 million. This sum relates to all the advanced further education provided by local education authorities, not only to colleges of higher education.

My right hon. Friend set out the grounds for his decision in his reply of 12 November to the hon. Member for Surrey, South-West (Mrs. Bottomley) at column 107.

Nursery Education

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many children under five years entering school in the current year have had at least one year's nursery education as a percentage of all children entering primary school.

Mr. Dunn: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Teacher's Dispute

Mr. Speller asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what figures his Department collects on the consequences of the teachers' dispute;

(2) if he will seek information from local education authorities on the number of (a) teachers and (b) pupils involved in industrial action and the number of pupils affected.

Sir Keith Joseph: There are 104 LEAs in England and Wales, over 26,000 maintained schools, some 440,000 qualified teachers and approaching 8 million pupils. The Department has attempted to collect information on a regular basis concerning the nature, extent and effects of industrial action by teachers. In view of the size of the school system, variations in both the scale and effects of industrial action, the wide range of action taken from strikes to refusal to undertake certain activities inside and outside timetabled schools hours, the increasing incidence of short-notice strikes by individual teachers for periods of half an hour or less, and the manpower implications for both the Department and LEAs, it is not feasible to assemble comprehensive data.

Further Education

Mr. Fisher asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will publish a list showing the percentages of pupils in each education authority in England and Wales who (a) stay on to sixth form and (b) continue full-time further education, in the last year for which statistics are available.

Mr. Dunn: The percentages of young people aged 16 who remained in full-time education in maintained secondary schools or in further education establishments in English local education authorities in 1984-85 are given below. Statistics for schools and further education establishments in Wales are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Maintained Schools (Parental Contributions)

Mr. Gerald Bowden asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on parents' financial contributions to maintained schools.

Mr. Dunn: Local education authorities may by law accept gifts from parents and others towards the discharge of their statutory functions, and their is a long and honourable tradition under which such gifts are made and applied for good educational purposes. The Government welcome the generosity which very many parents have shown and continue to show in helping their children's schools. It is however important to see the scale of the resources involved in perspective. The National Confederation of Parent Teacher Associations, in its recent report on the state of schools in England and Wales, estimated that total parental funding throughout England and Wales in 1983-84 probably approached £40 million. This sum, although large, is only about half of one per cent. of the total cost of school education. The burden of financing the schools falls almost entirely on the taxpayer and the ratepayer, and will continue to do so.

Local education authorities are under a statutory duty to ensure that their schools are sufficiently equipped to provide suitable education for all their pupils; each LEA therefore needs to satisfy itself about the level of equipment and materials available to its schools. Moreover, section 61 of the Education Act 1944 prohibits the charging of fees for the education provided in maintained schools. Any parental contributions to the costs of that education must therefore be voluntary. This should be made clear to parents; and if voluntary contributions are invited it should also be made clear that no child will suffer any detriment because his or her parents are unable or unwilling to make those contributions.

The Government have made clear their view that, in the light of the statutory provisions, local education authorities are not entitled to anticipate any particular level of parental contributions when setting the level of capitation allowances for individual schools, since those contributions are voluntary and cannot, therefore, be relied upon. LEAs are however entitled to consider the provision already made in individual schools, and to give additional support to those schools which are less fortunately placed than others, whether that situation arises because of different levels of parental support in the past or for some other reason.

Within the limit of the resources available to them, LEAs' objective should be to ensure that the fullest possible range of educational opportunities is available to children in every school. Authorities therefore need to be alert to any discrepancy in opportunities which is arising and to seek to help schools where necessary. This does not mean that capitation should be reduced below the general level for the well-provided schools; it may mean that some schools might look to the LEA for additional support.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Toxic Materials

Mr. Hancock asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what regulations cover the dumping at sea of toxic material, including asbestos.

Mr. Gummer: The deposit of any substance or article in the sea from ships aircraft, hovercraft, or marine structures is governed by the Dumping at Sea Act 1974. The legislation provides that, subject to certain exemptions, such deposit may take place only under the terms of a licence granted by the appropriate Government Department.

Intervention Wheat

Sir Nicholas Bonsor asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the average storage cost of one tonne of intervention wheat from purchase to disposal; and what is the average time that one tonne of wheat is stored in intervention.

Mr. Gummer: Currently the average length of time for which intervention wheat has been held in store is 10 months; the average cost of storage is 2·8 pence per tonne per day.

Intervention Stocks

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give the precise locations of all intervention stores in the United Kingdom on 15 November; if he will give full details of the volume and nature of the stocks held at each location; what is the longest period of time for which cereals have been stored at each location; what is the estimated total cost to the United Kingdom of storing EEC food surpluses here in 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement setting out the location of the various public and private stores financed by the intervention board for agricultural produce.

Mr. Gummer: [pursuant to his reply, 21 November 1985, c.301]: The locations and quantities of intervention stocks as at 30 September, the latest date for which figures are available, are listed below. The longest period for which cereals have been held at each store would be disproportionately costly to calculate, but it is estimated that the average period for which current cereals stocks have been held is 10 months. The latest estimate of storage and related costs in respect of intervention stocks (including feed grains) is £102 million as given in the 1985-86 winter supplementary estimate for class III, vote 1.

Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowance Scheme

Mr. John asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) in how many instances in each of the past five years payments of hill livestock compensatory allowances have been withheld on conservation grounds;

(2) if he plans to amend the hill livestock compensatory allowance scheme to take account of the problems of overgrazing and of consequential damage to semi-natural vegetation.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 21 November 1985, c. 301]: The existing rules and procedures governing the payment of hill livestock compensatory allowances already take account of the desirability of avoiding overgrazing, and these are kept under review.

I regret that the detailed information requested by the hon. Member is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Environment (Sensitive Areas)

Mr. John asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what sums of money he has provisionally allocated for the establishment of environmentally sensitive areas within the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Fenner [pursuant to her reply, 21 November 1985, c. 302]: The level of expenditure will depend on the detailed arrangements which we hope to introduce next year. However, we are anxious to ensure that this scheme gets off to a good start. We estimate that this would cost £6 million in a full year if, as intended, 5 or 6 acres are designated during 1986.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Visitors

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will enumerate the visitors to Northern Ireland during each year since, and including, 1969.

Dr. Boyson: The information is as follows:

Year	Numbers
1969	1,066,000
1970	977,000
1971	670,000
1972	435,000
1973	468,800
1974	486,800
1975	529,600
1976	432,000
1977	503,200
1978	628,000
1979	728,000
1980	710,000
1981	588,000

Year	Numbers
1982	712,000
1983	865,000
1984	908,000

DEFENCE

SACEUR (Modernisation)

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects discussions on SACEUR's proposed modernisation plans;

Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Defence when Her Majesty's Government expect to take the decision on implementation of SACEUR's proposals for modernisation, as detailed in the final communiqué of the recent nuclear planning group meetings dated 31 October.

Mr. Heseltine: At the NATO nuclear planning group meeting in Brussels on 29-30 October 1985, my Ministerial colleagues and I discussed further the measures which SACEUR had presented at the NPG meeting in Luxembourg earlier in the year to reduce the number of nuclear weapons in Europe and to ensure the survivability and effectiveness of those that remained. These recommendations are being pursued by SACEUR in co-ordination with the nations concerned. In some areas, the need for action will not arise for some years and therefore no early decisions are required. In other areas, SACEUR's proposals for reductions and improvements do require early decisions or are already being processed. For example, NATO's atomic demolition munitions have now been completely withdrawn. No decisions affecting the modernisation of weapons systems in service with British forces have been made, but we expect to begin discussions with SACEUR next spring about a number of recommendations which he has made to improve their survivability and effectiveness in the longer term.

Departmental Files (Access)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Defence what arrangements operate for the logging of those who have access to (a) computer and (b) manual files kept by his Department on individuals; and if he will describe the procedures in operation for both categories.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Specific guidelines on security of automatically processed data in Government Departments are observed. They are contained in "Protection of Information in Computer Systems" and "Central Government Code of Practice No. 21", issued by the Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency, which give recommended procedures to safeguard data in computer installations. Copies of these guidelines have been placed in the House Library. Access to information on individuals held on manual files is limited strictly by the "need to know", and confidential and personally sensitive information is held under secure conditions.

Strategic Defence Initiative

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Defence which United Kingdom companies, universities and research institutions have indicated to his Department that they are interested in competing for research contracts under the United States strategic defence initiative; and which of these are currently undertaking advanced information technology work under the Alvey programme.

Mr. Norman Lamont: A number of inquiries have been received from various sources concerning possible British participation in SDI research. Since the Government are still considering their position with regard to possible participation and in view of the confidential nature of some of the inquiries I am not able, at this stage, to provide the details requested.

Alvey Programme

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Defence if any additional funds have been made available after the beginning of the 1985-86 financial year to add to those originally allocated for work undertaken under the Alvey programme.

Mr. Norman Lamont: No additional defence funds have been made available.

Territorial Army

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received relating to the exclusion from membership of the Territorial Army of certain categories of public employees; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: No representations have been received on the principle of excluding certain categories of public employee from joining the Territorial Army but there have been individual cases where a waiver has been sought.

Married Quarters (Woolwich)

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many married quarters are provided by his Department in the Woolwich area; how many of these are (a) houses and (b) flats; and how many of each were vacant at the most recent available date.

Mr. Norman Lamont: There are 787 married quarters provided by the Ministry of Defence in the Woolwich area, of which 466 are houses and 321 flats. At 15 November 1985, 54 houses and 85 flats were vacant, but of these 32 houses and 31 flats have been allocated to incoming families. A further 17 houses and 29 flats are empty while undergoing repairs, and the balance of 25 flats and 5 houses are held against future requirements.

Army (Sensitive Trades)

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many applicants to the Army's sensitive trades have been rejected in each of the last 10 years by failing the nationality requirement.

Mr. Stanley: Statistics are not kept of the number of applicants rejected because of the nationality rules.

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received in respect of the nationality rules governing admission to the Army's sensitive trades; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: I am aware of one such case this year.

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether the nationality requirements for commissioned ranks in the Army's sensitive trades are the same as those for non-commissioned ranks.

Mr. Stanley: Yes.

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many exemptions have been made to the nationality requirements in respect of the Army's sensitive trades in each of the last 10 years; and whether, for each case, he will state the nationality of the parents of the successful applicant.

Mr. Stanley: According to the Department's records, the number of waivers from the restricted nationality rule granted to applicants to the Army during the last eight years is given in the table below:

Year	Waivers
1978	69
1979	89
1980	115
1981	59
1982	46
1983	63
1984	55
*1985	30

* To 19 November.

Details of the nationality of the parents in cases where a waiver has been granted are not held centrally. These figures include waivers granted to applicants for a commission who are required to meet the restricted nationality rule, irrespective of the regiment or corps to which application is being made.

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Defence what information is available to his Department in respect of the nationality requirements imposed by members of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation for admission to the sensitive trades of their armies.

Mr. Stanley: This information is not held in the Department.

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration has been given to changing the nationality rules governing admission to the Army's sensitive trades to bring these rules into line with those for general admission to the Army.

Mr. Stanley: The nationality rules have been reviewed from time to time since they were introduced, the last occasion being in 1982 when it was decided to retain the present requirements.

Army (Recruiting Policy)

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy on recruiting non-Caucasian British citizens into (a) the Brigade of Guards and (b) the Household Cavalry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: Entry to all regiments or corps of the British Army is regardless of ethnic origin, but is subject inter alia to the Army nationality rules.

RAF Greenham

Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether RAF Greenham has maintained a complete training programme since July.

Mr. Stanley: We do not give details of the training exercises conducted by nuclear missile units.

Cyprus Secrets Trial

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) whether the seven acquitted defendants in the Cyprus Official Secrets Act trial will receive all pay and allowances due to them for the period between their arrest and their acquittal; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether the seniority payments due to the seven acquitted defendants in the Cyprus Official Secrets Act trial are at the same level as they would have been had proceedings not been taken against them; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: I shall answer shortly.

Emergency Planning

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's role in emergency planning in times of crisis; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: In common with other Government Departments the Ministry of Defence has contingency plans and procedures for use in times of crisis. These plans are kept under review and, where appropriate, periodically exercised.

Expenditure White Paper

Mr. Roy Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has any plans to produce a new White Paper on defence expenditure.

Mr. Stanley: The cash provision for defence expenditure to 1988-89 was given by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer in his autumn statement on 12 November. Further details will be given in the public expenditure White Paper, to be published early in the new year.

NATO

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he has been consulted by the United States Government as to the number of ground-launched United States Air Force cruise missiles held at a high state of readiness or quick action alert, at RAF Greenham Common; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: United States ground-launched cruise missiles based in the United Kingdom are assigned to SACEUR in support of the NATO Alliance. The responsibility for detailed operational planning affecting these and other nuclear forces so assigned is a matter for SACEUR.

Trident

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will state the current cost of the Trident programme and if he will list (a) what sum and proportion of that cost will be spent in British firms (i) operating in the United Kingdom and (ii) operating as subsidiaries in the United States of America and (b) the number of jobs that will be created in the United Kingdom both (i) directly and (ii) indirectly as a result of this total expenditure.

Mr. Norman Lamont: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for defence announced a cost estimate for Trident of £9,285 million at 1984-85 prices and an exchange rate of £1 = $1·38 on 29 January 1985 at columns 134-137. Of this estimate, approximately 55 per cent. or over £5,100 million by value, is planned to be spent in the United Kingdom and is expected to create on average about 9,000 direct, and 7,000 indirect, job opportunities in United Kingdom firms during the period of procurement. These numbers will rise to about 17,000 and 13,000 respectively during the peak years.

The above figures exclude the benefit to British firms of sub contracts obtained on the United States Trident II programme under the Trident industrial participation arrangements. It is not possible at this stage to assess the total value of work that will be won. A small proportion of the contracts placed to date has been awarded to United Kingdom subsidiaries operating in the United States.

Establishments (Location and Dispersal)

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the proposals to transfer defence establishments to the north of England.

Mr. Norman Lamont: A mixture of historical and practical reasons account for the present concentration of defence establishments in southern England. A more even spread across the regions would be preferable, particularly in areas of high unemployment, and we are examining the scope for this. Proposals must, of course, be justifiable in both economic, and defence, as well as regional, terms

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will provide details of the costs of hiring a firm of outside consultants to advise on location and dispersal of Ministry of Defence establishments.

Mr. Norman Lamont: It is not the practice to disclose details of payments between the Ministry and a contractor.

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for Defence what account he took, prior to deciding to engage a firm of chartered surveyors, to advise on location and dispersal of Ministry of Defence establishments, of the availability of expertise in this matter with the Civil Service.

Mr. Norman Lamont: There is considerable expertise in estate management within the Civil Service, but on this occasion it was thought right to supplement this advice with the view of a leading professional in private practice.

Royal Ordnance Factories

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement regarding the present viability of royal ordnance factories; and what effects he forecasts will result from privatisation.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The change of the royal ordnance factories' status to that of an independent, commercial Companies Act company has improved flexibility and opened up new trading opportunities, thus enhancing the organisation's overall prospects. Privatisation will be the final step to virtually complete commercial freedom to secure a prosperous future, but at all times success will depend on the company's ability to exploit commercial opportunities.

Mr. Peter Pike asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) which royal ordnance factories at present maintain strategic capacity;

(2) at which royal ordnance factories he proposes to maintain strategic capacity.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Detailed arrangements of this kind are a contractual matter between the Ministry of Defence and Royal Ordnance plc.

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he proposes that Coopers and Lybrand will issue the prospectus for privatisation of the royal ordnance factories before he makes an announcement on strategic capacity.

Mr. Norman Lamont: In the usual way I would expect a prospectus for the public offer for sale of shares in Royal Ordnance plc to be issued by a merchant bank acting on behalf of the Secretary of State for Defence. Coopers and Lybrand are not a merchant bank. The timing of the issue of a prospectus would depend on the timing of the sale; which as I indicated to the hon. Member for Blackburn (Mr. Straw) on 22 October 1985 at column 141 is subject to a number of factors.

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will ensure that the prospectus for royal ordnance factories contains the full details of accountancy figures.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The intention of the hon. Member's question is not clear. A prospectus is a formal document which must meet certain statutory and quasi-statutory regulations. It follows that the Royal Ordnance plc prospectus would contain sufficient accounting detail to meet these requirements, but the precise amount of information will be a matter for judgment in the light of advice from our merchant bank.

Air Defence

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on United Kingdom air defence capability.

Mr. Stanley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Leeds, Central (Mr. Fatchett) on 22 October at column 141.

Strategic Defence Initiative

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence what agreement he has reached with the United States Secretary of State on strategic defence initiative research participation.

Mr. Norman Lamont: None. Following my right hon. Friend's recent talks with Secretary Weinberger in Brussels the Government are still considering the question of participation in research.

United Kingdom Land Forces (Germany)

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement concerning the operational mobility of United Kingdom land forces in Germany.

Mr. Stanley: Operational mobility is a central consideration in the planning for and equipment of the United Kingdom land forces in Germany. This is reflected, for example, in the introduction of new equipments such as Challenger, Saxon, MCV 80 and Tracked Rapier all of which will significantly enhance the mobility of our forces, and in the provision of specialist support equipment to sustain the mobility of fighting units.

Spare Munitions

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has received any representations from royal ordnance factories concerning spare munitions capacity.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I shall answer shortly.

European Fighter Aircraft

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will estimate the total cost of the European fighter aircraft programme to the United Kingdom.

Mr. Norman Lamont: No. As I explained to the hon. Member on 22 October 1985 at columns 141-142, a report from industry on the project definition phase of the European fighter aircraft is not expected before next summer.

India (Defence Minister)

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence what recent discussions he has had with India's Defence Minister.

Mr. Stanley: In the course of this year, my right hon. Friend has had discussions on defence matters with Mr. Rajiv Gandhi, during his visit to London in October, and with the previous Defence Minister, Mr. Narasimha Rao, during his visit in June.

Reserve Forces

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made concerning the expansion of reserve forces.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Since 1979 the strength and role of the volunteer reserve forces have been greatly expanded. Principal developments include the following:

The Territorial Army (TA) has been increased from a strength of about 59,000 in 1979 to some 74,000 now, with a target of 86,000 by 1990;

A new home service force has been raised as part of the TA, and is now some 3,5000 strong;

The strength of the Royal Naval Reserve (RNR) is being increased from 5,226 to 7,800, and it is being re-equipped with new minesweepers and patrol craft;

The Royal Marines Reserve is expanding from a strength of 1,047 to 1,580;

The Royal Auxiliary Air Force (RAuxAF) has raised nine new squadrons, including six RAuxAF Regiment field squadrons, and trials have been announced into the wider employment of the RAuxAF and the Royal Air Force Volunteer Reserve (RAFVR). These measures have substantially enhanced the vital contribution made by the volunteer reserve forces to our defence effort.

Ministry of Defence Police

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will publish the Broadbent report on the future of the Ministry of Defence police;

(2) What decision he has made on the future of the Ministry of Defence police, following the report of the Broadbent inquiry.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The Broadbent report confirmed the continuing need for the Ministry of Defence police. Its detailed recommendations are being studied. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for defence will arrange for the report to be published when this study is complete.

School Leavers

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he has any plans to seek to recruit large numbers of unemployed school leavers into the support arms of the forces.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The MOD currently operates the armed services youth training scheme (ASYTS) which is parallel to, but separate from, the Manpower Services Commission youth training scheme (YTS). Consideration is being given to the possible extension of the existing ASYTS from one to two years in line with that for the MSC YTS announced by the Chancellor in his Budget statement earlier this year. No decisions have yet been taken and no wider scheme is under consideration.

Royal Dockyards

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish in the Official Report a list of consultants engaged by his Department in relation to the management or proposed contracting out of the royal dockyards specifying the period of consultancy and the total cost of each consultancy to public funds.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I have included in the Official Report a list of consultants engaged in relation to the management or proposed introduction of commercial managment into the royal dockyards, together with details of the scope of their activities. On costs, I am not able to release details of individual contracts but the total has not changed from the figures I gave to the hon. Member on 18 November 1985 at column 96.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence on what basis classified information will be made available to private companies which have expressed interest in tendering for the contracts to run the royal dockyards.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Classified information on the royal dockyards is being released to private companies on exactly the same basis — and under the same controls — as it is released to any other potential defence contractor.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will postpone all visits by private companies to the royal dockyards until the Dockyard Services Bill has been passed.

Mr. Norman Lamont: No, Sir.

Retirements and Redundancies

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish in the Official Report tables showing for (i) the Ministry of Defence and (ii) the royal dockyards, for calendar years 1978 to 1984, the number of non-industrial civil servants by grade and age who have (a) taken early retirement and (b) been made redundant.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I shall answer shortly.

Written Answers to Questions

Monday 25 November 1985

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Justices of the Peace

Mr. Nicholas Brown asked the Attorney-General if he will list the organisations of which membership is a disqualification for appointment as a justice of the peace.

The Solicitor-General: Disqualifications for appointment as a justice of the peace are listed in paragraph 4.14 of the directions for advisory committees on justices of the peace, a copy of which is available in the Library.

Fraud Investigation Group

Mr. Nicholas Brown asked the Attorney-General what resources have been allocated to the newly created fraud investigation group within the prosecution service; and on what basis these resources were allocated.

The Solicitor-General: The fraud investigation group was set up in January 1985. Staff allocated to the group was as follows: a principal assistant director (grade 3) as controller and two assistant directors (grade 5) each heading a division of four senior legal assistants, dealing with the largest cases arising in, respectively, the Metropolitan and City police force areas and in the provinces. There is also a third, general fraud division, headed by an assistant director (grade 5) and having four senior legal assistants assigned to it.

The fraud investigation group divisions share with the general fraud division the services of a non-professional support team consisting of a senior executive officer in charge of about twenty five other staff.

From 1 February the fraud division were allocated the services of three accountants on secondment from the Department of Trade and Industry, one from accountancy services division and two from the Government insolvency service. As from January 1986 the fraud divisions are also to have the services of an examiner on secondment from the Government insolvency service to assist the accountants, and two further examiners will join them in February.

These resources have been allocated to the group in order to facilitate effective investigation — and if necessary prosecution — of major fraud cases. The lawyers and accountants concerned have been chosen with their experience in or aptitude for fraud cases in mind, but the number of lawyers and of non-professional support staff, available has been governed by the calls made on the director's staff by the setting up and staffing of the Crown prosecution service as a whole.

Peter Cameron Webb Syndicate

Mr. Sedgemore asked the Attorney-General (1) when the Director of Public Prosecutions first received representations concerning the affairs of the Peter Cameron Webb syndicate at Lloyds;

(2) if he will make a statement on progress in pursuing the case of the Peter Cameron Webb syndicate;

(3) whether any steps have been taken to seek to extradite Peter Cameron Webb; and if he will make a statement;

(4) whether any steps have been taken to seek to extradite T. Dixon, late of Peter Cameron Webb, and if he will make a statement;

(5) if the Director of Public Prosecutions has recommended that any charges should be brought against any person or any action should be taken against any person in respect of the Lloyds and Peter Cameron Webb papers before him; and if he will make a statement.

The Solicitor-General: I take references in the questions to the Lloyds case to refer to investigations concerning the affairs of the PCW syndicate and Alexander Howden. These matters were first referred to the director in 1982. Two separate but related investigations are being conducted under the auspices of a fraud investigation group formed for that purpose. It comprises police officers, members of the director's professional staff, accountants and very experienced specialist members of the bar. Despite the considerable financial and manpower resources devoted to the case serious delay has been imposed upon the progress of these investigations by the necessity of securing, in a form admissible in any criminal proceedings in England, evidence which hitherto has only been available from witnesses located within the jurisdiction of a foreign state. The availability of such evidence has resulted in insufficient evidence being available to justify certain criminal proceedings or an application for extradition of any person on certain grounds. No power exists whereby investigators in this country may compel the productiin of such evidence here. Investigators accordingly depend in such cases upon the assistance of the relevant foreign authorities, who themselves—however much they may wish to assist — are bound by their municipal rules relating to the granting of immunity from civil suits brought within their own jurisdiction, for example for breach of confidentiality. Nevertheless, in the present cases a way is vigorously being sought to overcome the problems I have mentioned connected with securing evidence within a foreign jurisdiction. The fraud investigation group is hopeful that such a way will be found, and it shares my own strong desire that it shall be. I plan next to discuss these investigations with the fraud investigation group on 27 November. Criminal proceedings will certainly be instituted if and so soon as evidence justifying them becomes available.

Pahoomal Family

Mr. Sedgemore asked the Attorney-General if the Director of Public Prosecutions has begun extradition proceedings against any member of the Pahoomal family; and if he will make a statement.

The Solicitor-General: The Director of Public Prosecutions has concluded that there is no witness from whom evidence is available sufficient to support the commencement of extradition proceedings in respect of any member of the Pahoomal family.

Non-solicitor Conveyancers

Mr. Weetch asked the Attorney-General if the Lord Chancellor will appoint representatives of non-solicitor conveyancers to the Council of Licensed Conveyancers in the initial period in accordance with schedule 3, paragraph 2(2) of the Administration of Justice Act 1985.

The Solicitor-General: I assume that the hon. Member is referring to schedule 3, paragraph 3(2) of the Act which defines "the initial period". The Lord Chancellor hopes to announce the membership of the council in the near future.

Cyprus Secrets Trial

Mr. Bermingham asked the Attorney-General what was the daily cost of keeping each of the seven acquitted defendants in the Cyprus Official Secrets Act trial in custody.

Mr. Mellor: I have been asked to reply.

The defendants in the Cyprus Offical Secrets Act trial were held in custody for varying periods in either Wormwood Scrubs prison, Brixton prison or, very briefly, Ashford remand centre. Six of the defendants were released on bail following a period in custody. It is not possible to calculate the costs of keeping individual persons in custody, but, based on figures which are available for the financial year 1984-85, it is estimated that the average daily cost of maintaining a person in one of these establishments was about £50.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Polluted Wine

Mr. Michael Cocks asked the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what further reports of possible incidents of polluted wine his Department has received in the last months;

(2) what new procedures his Department has introduced to seek to guard against the possible importation of polluted wine;

(3) whether he is satisfied with the efficacy of present arrangements to guard against the importation of polluted wine.

Mrs. Fenner: Under the Food Act 1984, enforcement authorities have power to sample and analyse all food and drink intended for sale for human consumption. These powers extend to port health authorities in respect of imported foods and drink. I have already passed all the relevent information I have on contaminated wines to the port health authorities and I am satisfied that they will carry out the necessary checks in the course of their normal duties.

I have recently received some reports from abroad of incidents concerning contaminated wines but no similar discoveries have been made in the United Kingdom. I am nevertheless making further inquiries where necessary.

Ethiopian Tinned Meat

Mr. Onslow asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will seek to suspend the import of Ethiopian tinned meat into the United Kingdom and other European Community countries until such time as the Ethiopian Government can show that no grain fit for human consumption is being used to fatten cattle for export from that country.

Mrs. Fenner: I will reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Wildlife (Poisons)

Dr. David Clark asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many reports of incidents involving the misuse of poisons or stupefying substances on wildlife have been made to his Department in the following years: 1983, 1984 and 1985 to the most recent date for which figures are available; and in how many cases the details were passed to the police for investigation.

Mrs. Fenner: The number of incidents involving the misuse of poisons or stupefying substances on wildlife reported to the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and Welsh Office Agricultural Department in the years 1983, 1984 and 1985 to date and the number of those cases reported to the police in those years are as follows:

	1983	1984	1985*
Number of incidents in which the suspected misuse of poisons or stupefying substances on wildlife were reported to MAFF:
England	73	53	55
Wales	14	14	4
	87	67	59
Number of cases passed to the police for investigation:
England	41	39	43
Wales	5	13	3
	46	52	46

* To 22 November 1985.

Battery Hens

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has made of the space which battery hens would require to have to ruffle their feathers, to stretch their bodies, to stretch their wings and to turn around, respectively.

Mrs. Fenner: I have made no estimates and I am not aware that conclusive scientific advice is available.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the current minimum space provided under current regulations for hens in battery cages.

Mrs. Fenner: There are no United Kingdom statutory minimum space allowances for hens in battery cages. However, the current welfare code for domestic fowls recommends allowances based on birds' body weight.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what progress was made in the discussions in the Council of Ministers on 18 and 19 November on Common Market regulations on the minimum space for hens in battery cages; what proposal for such minimum space was presented by the European Economic Community Commission; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will take steps to increase the minimum space available to hens in battery cages; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Fenner: No decisions were taken at the last Council meeting and this topic will be re-examined at the December Council. We shall continue to press for the early adoption of a directive laying down minimum welfare standards for laying hens in battery cages. The proposed directive would deal with space allowances, cage height and floor slope, feed trough lengths, enforcement measures and husbandry provisions. (The present focus of discussions is a minimum space allowance of 450 sq cm per bird, based on earlier assessments made by the Commission.) We believe that a Community-wide approach is the right one.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has made of the number of hens in battery cages in the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Fenner: We estimate that there are 47 to 48 million.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will take steps to ban the import of eggs from European Economic Community nations which have lower spaces for the containment of hens in battery cages than the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Fenner: I have no such plans and am seeking a Community agreement. Such import restrictions would be incompatible with the treaty.

Untreated Milk

Mr. O'Brien asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many deaths in Scotland from 1979 to August 1983 were caused by, or contributed to by, untreated milk; and what has been the number of deaths since August 1983 through untreated milk.

Mr. Gummer: Between 1979 and 1983, nine deaths in Scotland were attributed to untreated milk. Since 1983 there have been no such deaths, though there have been outbreaks of milk-borne disease as a result of the consumption of untreated milk by farm workers.

Mr. O'Brien asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many deaths occurred in England and Wales in 1984 as a result of untreated milk or where untreated milk was a contributory factor.

Mr. Gummer: There were seven deaths associated with consumption of untreated milk in 1984, all in west Yorkshire.

Eggs Authority

Sir Hector Monro asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he is now able to make a statement about the future of the Eggs Authority.

Mr. Jopling: Yes. When I announced publication of the report of the review committee under the chairmanship of the right hon. Lord Peyton of Yeovil, I said that I would be giving the egg industry an opportunity to consider and comment on the committee's recommendation that the authority should be dissolved.

My agricultural colleagues and I have taken careful note of the many representations we have received, which revealed differences of view within the egg industry. We do not consider that we should be justified in retaining a statutory body which does not command the widespread support of the industry concerned. We have accordingly decided to bring the authority to an end and propose to introduce a clause into the Agriculture Bill for this purpose.

The review committee was impressed by the potential of the British Egg Industry Council which already brings together, on a voluntary basis, all the major associations in the egg industry. My colleagues and I agree that the council provides scope for the industry to consider collectively its needs for the future and how these can best be met. This will include the means by which the egg industry would raise any funds it wished to devote to research and development in the light of the Government's recently announced policy of looking to the agricultural sector to shoulder some part of this cost. We shall be ready to hold discussions with the industry and BEIC about these matters. We shall consider sympathetically whatever arrangements the egg industry work out. One possiblity would be to use the Industrial Organisation and Development Act 1947 to set up a development council. On the other hand, the industry might prefer voluntary arrangements.

Sugar

Dr. Godman asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he next expects the Council of Agriculture Ministers to discuss proposals for a new EEC sugar regime; if he will specify the considerations which prevented decisions being reached at the Council Meeting on 18 and 19 November; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The next Agriculture Council discussion on the sugar regime proposals will take place on 9-10 December. No agreement was reached at the November Council because of the need for further work to be done on the Commission's proposals on production levies and related issues including the proposal on sugar for the chemical industry. It remains the Government's objective to secure satisfactory agreements on these proposals which take account of the interests of both producers and users.

ENVIRONMENT

Planning Decisions

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many planning decisions made by local authorities have been overturned by his Department in the past two years; and if he will break this figure down authority by authority.

Mr. Tracey: Planning appeal statistics are published annually in the Chief Planning Inspector's reports. In 1983 and 1984 the number of appeals decided and allowed, and the proportion allowed, under section 36 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1971, in England were:

	Decided	Allowed	Percentage Allowed
1983	11,221	3,633	32·4
1984	11,643	3,773	32·4

The Table gives details of appeals decided and allowed by each local planning authority in the periods, October 1983—September 1984 and October 1984—September 1985. Conclusions should be drawn with care from these figures because of the small number of appeals made annually against the decisions of most local planning authorities.

Walker House

Mr. Nicholas Brown asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what considerations are preventing him from agreeing to the wish of Newcastle city council to demolish Walker house in Walker.

Sir George Young: The demolition by a local authority of its own housing does not need my right hon. Friend's permission, but a special determination is necessary before housing subsidy can continue to be paid in relation to such housing. One relevant factor in considering applications for such determinations is whether the local authority's intention to demolish takes full account of the possibilities for sale to the private sector. If Newcastle upon Tyne city council submit a formal application for a special determination for Walker House, it will be considered on its merits.

Council House Sales (Wandsworth)

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the number of council houses or flats sold in each of the last five years in the London borough of Wandsworth and the number of new council properties built there in each of the last five years.

Sir George Young: The numbers of sales of council dwellings reported by Wandsworth for the financial years 1980-81, 1981-82 and 1982-83 appear in issues 62, 63 and 67 respectively of "Local Housing Statistics" and for 1983-84 and 1984-85 in issue 75: copies are available in the Library.

Wandsworth reported the following numbers of council dwellings completed in those financial years:

	Numbers
1980-81	507
1981-82	375
1982-83	316
1983-84	391
1984-85	117

In addition, 53 dwellings were completed for the GLC within Wandsworth during 1980-81 and 86 during 1981-82.

Communal Heating

Mr. Wheeler asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has concluded his consultations with the local authority associations and other interested bodies concerning his proposals to make regulations giving secure tenants who are supplied heat from a communal system a right to information about the costs of their heating; and when he now proposes to bring such regulations into effect.

Mr. John Patten: The Government have not yet consulted local authorities and other interested bodies but hope to do so soon. It is therefore too early to say when the regulations will come into effect.

Child Sex Abuse Unit

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he intends to confirm the grant of £323,000 made by the Greater Manchester council to the National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children for a specialist child sex abuse unit.

Mr. Tracey: The Council's application is being considered carefully.

Housing Co-operative Developments

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to introduce extended grants for housing co-operative developments to allow preliminary work to be done under section 121 of the Housing Act 1980.

Mr. John Patten: Under section 121 of the Housing Act 1980 the Housing Corporation makes grants to registered housing associations and other voluntary agencies for the purposes of encouraging, and advising on, the formation of new associations and providing services for, and advice to, existing associations. I consider that the present arrangements are satisfactory: the total provision for such grants in 1985-86 is £342,700 of which £94,700 has been set aside for co-operatives; decisions for 1986-87 have still to be taken. In addition to grants under section 121, Co-operatives can benefit from the co-operative promotion allowance which meets the extra costs incurred by co-operatives in seeking professional advice on specific development projects. It has recently been decided that this allowance, first introduced in 1984 for an initial period of one year, should be continued.

Industrial Land

Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total area of industrial land which is now unused or redundant in the Yorkshire and Humberside region and in the county of South Yorkshire.

Sir George Young: The information requested is not available and could not readily be produced at an economic cost within a reasonable time-scale.

New Homes

Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many new homes were completed during 1979 and 1984 in the Yorkshire and Humberside region.

Sir George Young: The number of housing completions is published in "Local Housing Statistics", copies of which have been placed in the Library. The number of new dwellings completed during 1979 and 1984 in Yorkshire and Humberside is as follows:

	Number
1979	20,567
1984	13,879

Water Authorities

Mr. O'Brien asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what provision is contained in the guidelines issued by him under section 7 of the Water Act 1983 as to what further recourse is available in cases where representations made to water authorities by consumer consultative committees on behalf of complainants are not resolved to the satisfaction of both parties; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The guidelines advised that where a complaint of maladministration causing injustice had not been satisfactorily resolved, a complainant should be reminded of the ultimate right to complain to the local ombudsman.

The guidelines do not affect a complainant's statutory rights of appeal or his right to seek redress through the Courts in appropriate cases.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Stewart asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will outline his Department's current preferred method of disposal or storage of high level radioactive waste; and what basic requirements the method would entail;

(2) if he will publish a list of sites presently under consideration for the storage or disposal of high level radioactive waste.

Mrs. Rumbold: Present policy is to store for at least 50 years, initially in liquid and then in vitrified form. This will secure a significant reduction in radiation and heat generation, which will make ultimate disposal easier and allows work to continue on establishing the best method of disposal.

Waste Disposal

Mr. Cunliffe asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has reached any conclusions on the performance of his duty under section 10 of the Local Government Act 1985 with regard to waste regulation and disposal in the metropolitan counties and Greater London.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer the hon. Member to the answer which my right hon. Friend gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Bury, South (Mr. Sumberg) on Thursday 21 November at column 255.

Public Sector Housing

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if, pursuant to the reply of 18 November, Official Report, column 59-60, he will list the organisations to which he sent his letter of 17 July.

Mr. John Patten: The letter of 17 July regarding "Disposal of Public Sector Housing for Renovation: Proposals for legislation" was sent to the following bodies:

Association of County Councils
Associations of District Councils
Association of London Authorities
Association of Metropolitan Authorities
Greater London Council
Housing Corporation
London Boroughs' Association
National Federation of Housing Associations
New Towns Association
Institute of Housing
National Consumer Council
SHAC
Shelter

In addition, copies were later sent on request to the following bodies:

Community Rights Project Limited
Coventry Trades Council Housing Sub-Committee
Elmbridge Federation of Tenants' Associations
Local Government Information Unit
London Tenants Organisation
Southwark Law Project
Sunderland Borough Council
Tower Hamlets Federation of Tenants' Associations
Wandsworth Tenants' Association
Waterlow Estate Tenants' Association
Welsh Counties Committee
Wimbledon Park Estate Tenants' Association

Housing Co-operatives

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the tenant management housing co-operatives referred to in the Prime Minister's answer of 18 November, Official Report, column 2; how much money is involved; and when he expects to announce the outcome of the review of earlier decisions.

Mr. John Patten: Applications for grant under section 93 of the Finance Act 1965 have been received from three tenant management co-operatives which are registered housing associations and are operating under approved agreements with local authorities.

Ewart Road Housing Co-operative Ltd. applied for grant of £4,456 in respect of the financial year 1982-83. That application was correctly rejected because the co-operative was not a registered housing association throughout the period covered by the claim, but the co-operative was incorrectly told in correspondence that its management activities would have made it ineligible for grant in any event. My Department has now written to the co-operative's chartered accountants to clarify the position and invite them to consider applying for grant in respect of later years.

Islington Green Tenants Co-operative Ltd. applied for grant of £654 in respect of the financial years 1981-82 and 1982-83. These applications were rejected since the co-operative did not become a registered housing association until 26 April 1982. Subsequent applications for grants totalling £838 have been accepted.

Wellington Mills Housing Co-operative Ltd. applied for grant of £6,222 in respect of the financial year 1982-83. That application was rejected since the co-operative did not become a registered housing association until 26 April 1982. Subsequent applications, for £1,509 in respect of 1983-84 and £2,373 in respect of 1984-85, were rejected because it was not appreciated that the co-operative's tax liability arose from its operation of an agreement approved by the Secretary of State. My Department has written to the co-operative and the 1983-84 and 1984-85 applications will be settled shortly.

Liverpool

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what contingency plans he has for action in the event of Liverpool city council becoming unable to meet its financial obligations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I understand that the city council is now considering urgent steps to put its finances in order.

Road Works (London)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) when he intends to give his decision on the consent to the cleaning and repainting of the Highgate Archway bridge, for which the Greater London council applied on 29 August;

(2) when he intends to give his consent to the widening of the southbound approach to the Kent Gate Way/Gravel Hill/Selsdon Park roundabout junction in Croydon, for which the Greater London council applied on 24 September;

(3) when he intends to give his decision on the consent to the cleaning and repainting of Lambeth bridge, for which the Greater London council applied on 13 August.

Mr. Tracey: Consent has already been given to these applications.

Local Authorities (Capital Expenditure)

Mr. Straw asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to be able to report the outcome of the current consultations between his officials and officers of the local authority associations on alternatives to the present system for controlling local authority capital spending.

Mr. Waldegrave: I hope to publish proposals early in the new year.

Local Authority Expenditure

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if, pursuant to the answer of 20 November, Official Report, column 246, he will express the figures contained or implied in that answer, relating to (a) estimated local authority capital receipts and (b) net capital expenditure allocations on housing for 1986-87, using the same price base as that employed in drawing up the figures for his statement of 18 December 1984 for the same subject.

Mr. John Patten: The information is as follows.

Local authority housing capital receipts are forecast to be £1,435 million in 1986-87. The details are as follows:

	£ million cash
Receipts from sale of land	100
Initial receipts from council house sales	780
Discount repayments	20
Repayment of sums left outstanding on sales	375
Repayments of loans to private persons	130
Repayments of loans to housing associations	30
	1,435

The assumptions about council house sales on which these forecasts are based are:

	Assumption
Number of completed sales	75,000
Average selling price net of discount	£13,900
Average level of discount	45 per cent.
Average level of private finance	75 per cent.

The housing investment programme allocations total for 1986-87 is £1,465 million. These figures, like all figures of receipts and allocations, are expressed in cash.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Fraud

Mr. Nicholas Brown asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, by year since 1979, how many cases of alleged major fraud were reported in the United Kingdom; and how many, by year, were prosecuted.

Mr. Mellor: It is not possible to separate major frauds as the available statistics are not analysed according to the amount involved in the fraud. Numbers of offences of fraud recorded in England and Wales in each year from 1974 to 1984 are published in table 2.14 of "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales, 1984" (Cmnd. 9621). For those offences dealt with by the courts, the sentence imposed reflects the seriousness of the offence. The number of persons prosecuted for fraud, and the sentences imposed on those found guilty, are published annually in tables S1.1(A), S2.1(A) and S2.4 of "Criminal Statistics 1984", Supplementary Volumes 1 and 2.

Prison Populations

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what was the average population of Liverpool prison in the week ended 2 November, or any other recent typical week;

(2) what was the average population of Manchester prison in the week ended 2 November, or any other recent typical week.

Mr. Mellor: On 31 October 1985 the population of Liverpool prison was about 1,290 and of Manchester remand centre and prison about 1,650. Average weekly populations are not collected centrally.

Liverpool Prison

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many baths, showers and toilets are available to prisoners in Liverpool prison; how many baths or showers each prisoner is allowed per week; and how many changes of clothes each prisoner is allowed per week.

Mr. Mellor: Liverpool prison currently has available to inmates a total of 18 baths, 66 showers, 131 WCs and 136 urinals. Each prisoner is normally allowed one bath or shower per week and an additional shower when they make use of the gymnasium. In addition, prisoners employed on jobs that are of a physically dirty nature have a shower each day.

Prisoners at Liverpool have one change of clothes per week consisting of one shirt, one pair of socks, one pair of underpants and one vest. Overclothing is changed as necessary. In addition, one towel, one sheet and one pillow-case are changed weekly.

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many square feet of exercise space are available to prisoners in Liverpool prison.

Mr. Mellor: Forty thousand, eight hundred and eighty eight sq ft in exercise yards, 109,620 sq ft in the grassed area, and 8,964 sq ft in the gymnasia.

Manchester Prison

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many baths, showers and toilets are available to prisoners in Manchester prison; how many baths or showers each prisoner is allowed per week; and how many changes of clothes each prisoner is allowed per week.

Mr. Mellor: Manchester prison currently has available to inmates a total of nine baths, 72 showers, 130 WCs and 105 urinals. Each prisoner is normally allowed one bath or shower per week, and those who are employed on jobs that are of a physically dirty nature have a shower each day, as do prisoners returning from court appearances.

Prisoners at Manchester have one change of clothes per week, consisting of two shirts, two pairs of socks, two pairs of underpants and two vests. Overclothing is changed as necessary, but on return from court, prisoners receive a full kit of clean clothes. In addition, one towel, one sheet and one pillow-case are changed weekly and a full set of bedding is available to prisoners on return from court.

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many square feet of exercise space are available to prisoners in Manchester prison.

Mr. Mellor: Fifty thousand, two hundred and ninety five sq ft in exercise yards, 60,534 sq ft in hard surface games areas, and 14,957 sq ft in the gymnasia.

Police (Helicopters and Light Aircraft)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many helicopters the Metropolitan police currently possess; what orders are currently outstanding; what further orders are planned; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that the Metropolitan police own three helicopters and that there are no orders outstanding or planned.

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Optica light aircraft are currently on order by the Metropolitan police.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that the Metropolitan police have not ordered any Optica aircraft.

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for reports from each chief constable as to the number of Optica light aircraft which are on order for each force in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: No.

Race Relations

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will seek to amend the Race Relations Acts so that a requirement to speak Welsh for certain jobs in Wales is outwith the scope of racial discrimination.

Mr. Waddington: I am not persuaded that any such amendment is necessary.

Commission for Racial Equality

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has issued any guidelines for the procedure to be followed by the Commission for Racial Equality for the selection of commissioners who have special responsibilities.

Mr. Waddington: No. As I explained in the reply given to a question from the hon. Member on 11 November at columns 35-36, the allocation of particular responsibilities to individual commissioners is entirely a matter for the commission.

Data Protection Act (Telephone Numbers)

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from British Telecom about the effect of the Data Protection Act on those who control the telephone numbers stored under press-buttons attached to certain telephones which are used for business purposes.

Mr. Waddington: None.

Parkhurst Prison

Mr. Stephen Ross asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the total estimated cost of converting C wing at Parkhurst prison into a therapeutic unit.

Mr. Mellor: The conversion work currently being undertaken in C wing will provide both a therapeutic unit and a rule 43 unit. A contract for the overall scheme has been let in the sum of £254,000.

Fruit Machines (Public Houses)

Mr. Hill asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will seek to increase to £20 the maximum prize permitted on fruit machines installed in public houses.

Mr. Giles Shaw: We have no present plans to do so.

Deportation

Mr. Grist asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons served with deportation orders in each of the last five years have disappeared prior to deportation being effected.

Mr. Waddington: I regret that the information is not readily available.

Heavy Goods Vehicles

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions have been brought in respect of defects in the roadworthiness of heavy goods vehicles during each of the past five years for which figures are available; how many have succeeded; and what has been the average fine imposed.

Mr. Mellor: No reliable information is available for specific types of vehicle. The available information is for all types of vehicle and relates to proceedings and findings of guilt at magistrates' courts for offences where a vehicle or part was in dangerous or defective condition, and is published annually in "Offences Relating to Motor Vehicles, England and Wales, Supplementary Tables" (offence group 14 of table 1). Information on the average fines imposed for these offences is shown in tables 6 and 12 of the latest issues.

Jashim Uddin

Mr. Leighton asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department why Jashim Uddin, a Bangladeshi who came for a visit on 13 October has been kept in detention for five weeks.

Mr. Waddington: Jashim Uddin was refused leave to enter the United Kingdom on 13 October and, having no right of appeal against that decision in this country, would have been returned to Bangladesh very quickly had the hon. Member not made representations against refusal. He was detained pending receipt and consideration of hon. Member's representations because the immigration service inspector who reviewed the case agreed with the chief immigration officer that it was not a proper case in which to grant temporary admission. I replied to the hon. Member's representations on 21 November.

Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions have been taken in 1983, 1984 and 1985, to the most recent date for which figures are available, for offences involving the misuse of poisonous baits or stupefying substances contrary to sections 5 and 11 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981.

Mr. Mellor: The information available to me, which may be incomplete is shown in the table below. It is not possible, without disproportionate cost, to distinguish those offences relating to the use of poisonous baits or stupefying substances. Information for 1985 is not yet available.

Defendants proceeded against at magistrates' courts in England and Wales for offences under section 5 or 11 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981

Number of defendants

Year	Proceedings taken under Section 5	Section 11

Parole

Mrs. Peacock asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement outlining the current guidelines issued to parole boards considering the release of those convicted of violent crimes.

Mr. Mellor: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Littleborough and Saddleworth (Mr. Dickens) on 21 November at column 274.

Scarman Report (Recommendations)

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent representations he has received about the application of the Scarman recommendations following the Brixton riots; what have been the nature of the representations; if he will consider a review of the recommendations and their application; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: During public discussion of the recent riots a number of references have been made to Lord Scarman's report in this House and elsewhere. The day after the Handsworth riot my right hon. Friend re-read the report and commissioned a study about how far it had been implemented. He has since placed a paper in the Library which shows that both the police and the Government have responded positively and vigorously to the report.

Immigration

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of the applicants queuing for entry clearance for settlement at each post in the Indian sub-continent are children.

Mr. Waddington: The information requested is given in the following table:

Children awaiting a decision on their application for entry clearance for settlement in the United Kingdom at the end of June 1985
Indian sub-continent

Post	Number of children	Children as percentage of all applicants for settlement awaiting a decision*
Dhaka	8,700	70
New Delhi	200	15
Bombay	220	18
Calcutta	10	19
Islamabad	3,400	50
Karachi	40	17
Total Indian sub-continent	12,500	57

* Wives, children, other dependent relatives and others for immediate settlement, and husbands and male fiances.

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, in 1984 how many women in the Indian subcontinent were granted entry clearance to join husbands in the United Kingdom in families where another wife had already been granted entry clearance.

Mr. Waddington: The information requested is not available centrally.

Plastic Bullets

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he has any plans to allow chief constables to use plastic bullets without his prior notification or approval, and if he will make a statement; (2) if he will list in the Official Report the chief constables who have applied for permission to use plastic bullets.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Government made plastic baton rounds available to police forces in Great Britain following the riots in 1981. In reply to a question by the hon. Member for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn) on 19 November at columns 140-41, I listed those forces in England and Wales understood to hold baton rounds.

As was made clear by the then Home Secretary on 19 October 1981 at columns 29-30, plastic baton rounds are to be used only as a last resort where conventional methods of policing have been tried and failed, or must from the nature of the circumstances obtaining be unlikely to succeed if tried, and where the chief officer judges such action to be necessary because of the risk of loss of life or serious injury or widespread destruction of property. They may be used only with the express authority of the chief officer of police (or, in his absence, his deputy). This is an operational matter for the chief officer of police, and my right hon. Friend's prior notification or approval is not required.

PRIME MINISTER

President Reagan

Mr. Parry asked the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on her recent meeting with President Reagan.

The Prime Minister: President Reagan and General-Secretary Gorbachev met in Geneva on 19-21 November. A copy of the joint statement issued by the two leaders on 21 November has been placed in the Library of the House. My right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign and Commonwealth Secretary and I attended a briefing by President Reagan for the Alliance in Brussels also on 21 November. The President received the full support of the Alliance for the achievements of the meeting.

The Geneva meeting was a success. It has helped to establish a measure of confidence and greater understanding between the leaders of the United States and the Soviet Union, given an impetus to the arms control negotiations in Geneva, and made clear that existing arms control agreements will continue to be honoured on a reciprocal basis.

There were a number of specific results: the institution of regular summit meetings, the commitment to make progress on a wide range of arms control issues including chemical weapons, the institution of regular exchanges on regional issues, steps to improve contacts and exchanges and other agreed measures set out in the joint statement.

As President Reagan himself said, the results of the summit will be judged over the months and years ahead by deeds not words. Fundamental differences remain both on matters of ideology, on some of the most difficult arms control issues, on regional problems and on human rights. But there is now a clear framework and timetable for discussion of these differences. The outcome of the summit justifies greater hope for their resolution and for peace and stability.

EMPLOYMENT

Community Programme

Mr. Lawler asked the Paymaster General what is the percentage of participants in the community programme which are from ethnic minorities both nationally and in west Yorkshire, and the percentage of long-term unemployed from ethnic minorities.

Mr. Alan Clark: The latest sample survey (autumn) 1984 of community programme participants estimate that 9 per cent. were from ethnic minority groups. Reliable results are not available below national level. The 1984 labour force survey indicated that of those people without jobs, and seeking work for one year or more, 9 per cent. were of non-white ethnic origins.

Radiation

Mr. Skinner asked the Paymaster General what is his Department's estimate of the number of workers exposed to some level of radiation in Britain at the latest available date; and how many of them are required to be monitored for radiation exposure.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Background radiation exists. The best estimate is that there are 364,000 workers occupationally exposed to ionising radiations above normal background levels.

About 135,000 people have their radiation exposure monitored either voluntarily or by law.

Mr. Skinner asked the Paymaster General whether he will now take steps to reduce the maximum permissible dose of radiation a worker is allowed to be given from 5 rems to 0·5 rems a year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No. The Ionising Radiations Regulations 1985 were subjected to long and wide-ranging consultation by the Health and Safety Commission.

Job Creation

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle asked the Paymaster General how many additional jobs have been created in the United Kingdom economy in the last 12 months.

Mr. Alan Clark: Estimates of the numbers of jobs created are not available. Net changes in the number of jobs may be calculated by comparing estimates of employment levels for different dates. The net increases in the employed labour force (which includes employees in employment, the self employed and members of Her Majesty's Forces) in the United Kingdom between June 1984 and June 1985 was 255,000.

Self-employed Persons

Mr. Brandon-Bravo asked the Paymaster General what has been the trend in self-employment since 1979.

Mr. Alan Clark: Since June 1979, the numbers of self-employed people in Great Britain are estimated to have changed as shown in the following table:

June of each year	Self-employed (with or without employees)	Change since preceding year
1979	1,842,000	−1,000
1980	1,950,000	108,000
1981	2,057,000	107,000
1982	2,109,000	52,000
1983	2,160,000	51,000
1984	2,433,000	273,000
1985	2,559,000	126,000

The estimate for 1985 is provisional.

Youth Training Scheme

Mr. Nellist asked the Paymaster General what percentage of youth training scheme leavers in (a) Coventry and (b) the west midlands, who left the scheme in each of the months from June 1984 to June 1985, were in (i) full-time employment and (ii) part-time employment three months later.

Mr. Trippier: Information is not available in the form requested. The Manpower Services Commission's regular surveys of young people leaving youth training scheme programmes do, however, show that of leavers between 1 June 1984 and 31 March 1985, 54 per cent. in the Coventry area of the commission's training division, and 55 per cent. in the commission's Midlands region, were in full-time work at the time of the survey.

Figures for leavers since 1 April 1985 are available on a more comprehensive basis. These show that, of leavers between 1 April 1985 and 31 May 1985, 50 per cent. were in full-time work and 5 per cent. in part-time work in the Coventry local authority district at the time of the survey. In the county of West Midlands, 53 per cent. were in full-time work and 4 per cent. in part-time work.

Mrs. Peacock asked the Paymaster General if he will make a statement on the standard of employment status and protection afforded to those on youth training scheme schemes.

Mr. Trippier: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Winnick asked the Paymaster General (1) if he will give the numbers of those who have been unemployed for 12 months and more in May 1979 and the percentage increase since then; and what estimate he has of the number of people currently out of work who are not claiming benefit;

(2) if he will give the numbers of those who had been unemployed for 12 months or more in May 1979 within (a) the west midlands region and (b) the black country area; what is the percentage increase since then; and what estimates he has of the number of people currently out of work who are not claiming benefit in each of these areas.

Mr. Alan Clark: The following information is in the Library. The table gives the numbers of registrants in the United Kingdom and the west midlands who had been unemployed for over 12 months in April 1979 (not available for May).

Comparisons of unemployment over the period specified are difficult to make because of the change in the basis of the count in October 1982, the 1983 Budget provisions which mean that some men, mainly aged 60 or over, no longer need to sign on at unemployment benefit offices to receive benefit, and, for local areas, the change to a ward-based system for allocating claimants to localities. The table also shows the number of unemployed claimants in the United Kingdom, the west midlands and the black country as at 10 October 1985.

Unemployed over 12 months

	Number
Unemployed registrants—April 1979
United Kingdom	366,711
West midlands	34,154
Unemployed claimants—October 1985
United Kingdom	1,351,857
West midlands	164,848
Black country*	50,266

* Figures relate to the Dudley and Sandwell, Wolverhampton and Walsall travel-to-work areas, as defined in 1984.

According to the labour force survey in Great Britain in the spring of 1984, there were about 870,000 people without jobs seeking work but not claiming unemployment benefits. There were about 90,000 in the west midlands. The sample size of the survey is insufficient to provide those figures for the black country.

Mr. Nellist asked the Paymaster General if he will publish a table showing the registered number of vacancies by standard industrial classification in the Coventry area at the latest available date and at May 1979.

Mr. Alan Clark: The following information is in the Library. Table 1 shows the numbers of unfilled vacancies at jobcentres which cover an area closely corresponding to the Coventry and Hinckley travel-to-work area as at May 1979 according to the 1968 standard industrial classification. Table 2 shows the numbers of unfilled vacancies, excluding self-employed vacancies at jobcentres which cover the same area at 2 August 1985, the latest date for which an analysis according to the 1980 standard industrial classification is available.

Misleading Advertisements

Mr. Wareing asked the Paymaster General if he will introduce legislation to strengthen the legal provisions governing misleading advertisements offering employment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Regulations govern the conduct of employment agencies and employment businesses cover advertisements for jobs. Agents must make clear in their advertisements that they are employment agents. If they offer an information service about jobs and have no authority from employers to find workers for such jobs, they must state this in the advertisement. Employment businesses must state rates of pay, the minimum qualifications required to earn them, the nature of the job and its location. They must also state when workers are to be supplied on a self-employed basis only. There are no plans to strengthen or alter this legislation.

Visual Display Units

Mr. Hancock asked the Paymaster General what studies have been made to assess the possible effects of visual display units on their operators.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [pursuant to his reply, 22 November 1985]: Many studies have been undertaken over the last ten years. They have mainly looked at possible effects on vision, musculo skeletal problems, skin and alleged reproductive problems. "Health effects of VDUs: a bibliography by Rosemary Thomas" has been published by the Health and Safety Executive. I have placed a copy in the Library.

More recent published studies include "Work and pregnancy in Montreal—preliminary findings on work with visual display terminals", "Birth defects and video display terminals" and "Video display work and pregnancy—research in the Nordic countries". I will arrange for copies to be placed in the Library.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Textbooks

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has as to the number of schools in each local authority in which children are sharing textbooks and as to what proportion of all school children this represents.

Mr. Dunn: The Department does not collect information in this form. Her Majesty's Inspectors judged, in their report on the effects of local expenditure policies on education provision in England, 1984, itself based on information collected in the autumn term of 1984, that in primary schools the level of book provision was satisfactory or better in over four-fifths of local education authorities, and that for the 11-16 and 16-19 age groups the provision was satisfactory or better in nearly two-thirds and just over three-quarters of LEAs respectively. HMI noted in the report that for all age groups book provision in 1984-85 was better than it has been in 1983-84.

Youth Service

Mr. Freeman asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has so far received in response to circular 1/85 on the youth service.

Mr. Dunn: Circular 1/85 on the youth service requested responses from local authorities by 31 December 1985. So far nine responses have been received and some voluntary and other organisations have submitted general views on the issues raised in the circular.

Geophysics

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on his Department's policy on research into geophysics in the light of the report of a Royal Society working party on "The Support of Geophysics in the United Kingdom", a copy of which has been sent to him.

Mr. Walden: My right hon. Friend awaits the advice of the Advisory Board for the Research Councils on this matter.

School Meals

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his latest estimate of the numbers and percentage of local education authorities which provide free school meals to families above the entitlement levels for family income supplement; and how many families are affected.

Mr. Dunn: In October 1984, 65 authorities, that is 68 per cent. of the local education authorities in England, granted free meals above the level of entitlement for family income supplement and supplementary benefit. Information on the number of families is not available. The report of the school meals census for autumn 1984 "Provision of School Meals, England October 1984" is available in the Library.

Institute of Psychiatry

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give for each year since 1979 the total income and expenditure of the Institute of Psychiatry breaking down the figures by source of income and item of expenditure; and if he will make a statement on the institute's deficit of £250,000.

Mr. Walden: Details of the income and expenditure of the Institute of Psychiatry are given in its accounts. Copies of the accounts for 1980 to 1984 have been placed in the Library. The accounts for the year to 31 July 1985 are still being audited but I understand that arrangements are in hand to fund the deficit.

Disabled Students

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what advice his Department has given to education authorities on the provision of interpreters for deaf students in primary and secondary schools, further education colleges and adult education institutes.

Mr. Dunn: The Department has given no advice to local education authorities on this matter. The provision of interpreters for deaf students in primary and secondary schools, colleges of further education and adult education institutes is a matter for individual authorities to decide upon.

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many children have moved into mainstream schools from special schools for (a) deaf children, (b) blind children, (c) physically handicapped children, (d) children with mild learning difficulties and (e) children with severe learning difficulties in each of the years since 1981.

Mr. Dunn: This information is not collected.

Medical Research Council

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he will list those establishments which currently receive funding through the Medical Research Council for investigations of the treatment of trauma caused by accident or injury; and, in the case of each establishment, what is the broad nature of the research being undertaken;

(2) what level of funding is currently available through the Medical Research Council for investigations of the treatment of trauma caused by accident or injury for each establishment that is currently in receipt of such funding.

Mr. Walden: I understand that the Medical Research Council is funding 38 projects on research into trauma, including projects which could prove relevant to an understanding of trauma. The projects span work carried out at MRC's own establishments and through grant support to universities. In the financial year 1984-85 the council's expenditure on this research amounted to £1·2 million. I will write to my hon. Friend with further details.

Details of the council's activities are listed in the Medical Research Council Handbook for 1984-85, a copy of which is available in the Library.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether funding through the Medical Research Council of the trauma unit at the University of Manchester is to be continued.

Mr. Walden: It is for the Medical Research Council to decide how to apportion the grant-in-aid it receives from the Department's science budget between the various areas of science which it supports under the provisions of its charter. I understand that the council has not yet reached a decision about the future of its trauma unit.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) how many people are currently employed in Medical Research Council units in England and Wales, and how many of these employees are in the north-west region;

(2) if he will state the total number of Medical Research Council units in England and Wales; and how many of these units are located in the north-west region.

Mr. Walden: I understand that the Medical Research Council has 48 units in England and Wales which employ 2,812 people. Of these, two units employing 36 people are located in the north-west region.

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will review the operation of the Medical Research Council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Walden: No. The Advisory Board for the Research Councils advises my right hon. Friend on a continuing basis on the operation of all the research councils, including the Medical Research Council.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on his policy concerning the geographic location of Medical Research Council units.

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will examine and report on the geographical distribution of grants by the Medical Research Council.

Mr. Walden: The geographical location of the work which the Medical Research Council funds is a matter for the scientific judgment of the council.

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received on the distribution, nature and purposes of grants by the Medical Research Council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Walden: Since 1 January 1985 the Department has received 23 representations from hon. Members and other interested parties about the distribution, nature and purposes of grants funded by the Medical Research Council.

Schools of Architecture (Closures)

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science on what criteria the proposed closures of schools of architecture in Belfast, north-east London and Huddersfield polytechnics are based.

Mr. Walden: The recommendations to the National Advisory Body for Public Sector Higher Education (NAB) and to the University Grants Committee (UGC) that the schools of architecture at Huddersfield and North East London polytechnics and Queen's university Belfast cease intakes to part 1 courses in 1986 and to part 2 courses as soon as possible thereafter and no later than 1989, and the criteria on which these recommendations are based, are contained within the architecture intakes working party report (August 1985), a copy of which has been placed in the Library.

Spina Bifida

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he has received the report of the Medical Research Council on the efficacy of multi-vitamin treatments in the prevention of spina bifida;

(2) whether he now has sufficient evidence to determine if the addition of multivitamin supplements in early pregnancy can affect the development of spina bifida in children.

Mr. Walden: No. The relevant trial, which the Medical Research Council is conducting, started in the summer of 1983. I understand that the council expects that up to five years may be needed, from the time the trial started, before results are obtained.

Students (Financial Assistance)

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will make a statement on the policy of his Department in respect of the financial support of students during vacations.

Mr. Walden: The maintenance grant provides for the financial support of students during the Christmas and Easter vacations. No provision is made for the summer vacation.

Deaf Teachers

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to make an announcement on the replacement for circular 11/78 in respect of the medical regulations affecting deaf teachers; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: Following consultation on a replacement to circular 11/78 the Department invited comments by 31 October 1985 on revised paragraphs dealing with defective eyesight and hearing in relation to initial teacher training. Urgent consideration is being given to the comments received.

Universities

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what he expects to be the additional cost to universities' national insurance contributions in the forthcoming academic year as a result of the 1985 budget.

Mr. Walden: It is estimated that the net additional cost to the universities of employers' national insurance contributions will be between £7 million and £8 million for the 1986-87 academic year, which is the first full academic year to which the new contribution rates will apply.

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what information is available to his Department in respect of the length of time taken to fill fixed-term appointments in universities; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what information he has as to the number of university posts without tenure which remain unfilled for (a) one month, (b) three months and (c) more than six months after the first notification of the vacancy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Walden: This information is not collected centrally.

Academic Clinical Staff

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will estimate the cost of implementing the 1985 salary increase awarded to National Health Service staff to university clinical staff.

Mr. Walden: The estimated cost of implementing the 1985 salary increase awarded to NHS staff to university clinical academic staff is about £4 million in a full year. This includes the cost of employers' national insurance and superannuation contributions.

Academic Clinical Staff

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education if she will publish a table in the Official Report setting out the salaries of clinical academic staff and National Health Service staff at comparable levels of seniority and specialism for each of the last three years.

Mr. Walden: The information requested is as follows.

Salaries scales of clinical staff at universities are derived from NHS scales as shown in the table and parity has been maintained until 1984-85. NHS doctors and dentists have received pay increases averaging 6·3 per cent. from 1 June which would add 5·3 per cent. to the pay bill for the year ending 31 March 1986. The university employers have said that they are unable to apply that increase to clinical academic staff without compensation for the costs in excess of whatever settlement might be agreed for non-clinical academic staff. In the meantime a "without prejudice" interim payment of 4 per cent. has been made with effect from 1 June.

Higher Education

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has as to the proportion of pupils with only one A-level entering higher education in 1985-86 compared with 1979-80.

Mr. Walden: The proportions of English school leavers in 1978-79 and 1983-84 (the latest year for which information is available) who obtained one A-level pass and who intended directly to pursue a full-time degree or equivalent teacher training course were 5·2 per cent and 1·4 per cent. respectively.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Information Technology Centres

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is his policy towards financial self-sufficiency for information technology centres.

Mr. Pattie: The funding provided by my Department to information technology centres is intended to be used in part to create revenue generating activities. I am pleased to announce that in addition to this support my Department, in conjunction with the Manpower Services Commission, is currently setting up a national marketing organisation which it is considered will be of great help to centres in moving towards self-sufficiency. This facility should be available for the use of all ITeCs early in the new year.

Imports (Soviet Union)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will give a breakdown of the products which have been imported into the United Kingdom from the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics during the last six years and the extent to which these imports rose or decreased from year to year during the same period; and if he will list the trade balance between the two countries from year to year during the same period.

Mr. Channon: Information relating to the crude balance, and imports under six of the main product groups is given in the table. A fuller breakdown of imports by SITC/R2 division may be obtained from table II of the relevant issue of "UK Overseas Trade Statistics".

West Midlands County Council (Trade Mission)

Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what advice and assistance his Department gave to the West Midlands county council trade mission to Hong Kong from 19 October to 10 November 1984; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Channon: My Department provided advice to the Birmingham city council and the West Midlands county council on the export promotion aspects of a Birmingham and West Midlands festival held in Hong Kong in October and November 1984. The British Overseas Trade Board provided financial support under its usual conditions to participants in a parallel trade mission organised by the West Midlands regional group of chambers of commerce. It also gave financial and organisational support to a wider British trade promotion sponsored by the Birmingham chamber of commerce and industry.

Private Manufacturing (Investment)

Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the average level of investment per employee in the private manufacturing sector in (a) the east midlands and (b) for England as a whole in 1981 and 1984.

Mr. Butcher: Regional investment data relating to the private sector of manufacturing industry are not readily available and would be costly to compile. Estimates for 1983 and 1984 are not yet available. Available information is given in the following table:

Net capital expenditure per head in manufacturing industry at current prices*

Life Insurance Policies

Mr. Dykes asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if, before reaching a final decision as to whether to seek to compel salesmen in the United Kingdom to disclose their commissions when marketing life insurance policies, he will have regard to the practice in the rest of the European Economic Community, the United States of America and the major countries of the Commonwealth; and what such information is presently available to him.

Mr. Howard: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Export Credits Guarantee Department

Mr. Sedgemore asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has estimated the probable loss to the Export Credits Guarantee Department of guarantees given in respect of trade with Nigeria since 1981; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Channon: The Export Credits Guarantee Department has made substantial claims payments relating to trade with Nigeria since 1981. The majority of the claims results from delays in the transfer of foreign exchange which the Nigerian authorities intend to clear by 1989.

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish in the Official Report the total cumulative losses under the Export Credits Guarantee Department's comprehensive basic guarantee schemes; and if he will list under each facility the percentage of total claims payments for that facility attributable to the 10 biggest loss-making individual guarantees.

Mr. Channon [pursuant to his reply, 20 November 1985, c. 188]: The information is not available in the precise form requested because final losses do not become known until some years after the guarantees are given. Details of the outturn of ECGD's activities are published annually in the audited trading accounts and provisional figures for 1984-85 are in "ECGD Trading Results 1984-85", copies of which are in the Library of the House.

Mr. Sedgemore asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he or his officials have held any discussions since 1981 with the Nigerian authorities over trade in relation to export credit guarantees or other trade involving alleged fraud; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Channon: United Kingdom policy on export credit support for Nigeria has been regularly discussed in the course of normal bilateral exchanges between trade and other officials. Questions of alleged fraud have not arisen during these meetings.

Johnson Matthey Bankers

Mr. Sedgemore asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) when he first became aware of possible losses to the Export Credits Guarantee Department arising out of alleged fraudulent trading by customers of Johnson Matthey Bankers and other banks;

(2) when he first became aware of possible irregularities concerning guarantees given by the Export Credits Guarantee Department in relation to trade since 1981 carried on by customers of Johnson Matthey Bankers and other banks; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Channon: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Small Insurance Intermediaries

Mr. Shersby asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make it his policy to maintain opportunities for small insurance intermediaries engaged in general business to expand without unnecessary restrictions in terms of extended registration procedure or the payment of fees to registration bodies.

Mr. Howard: It is not the Government's policy to reduce opportunities by placing unnecessary restrictions upon any kind of business.

Sumrie plc

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry pursuant to his reply of 19 November to the hon. Member for Leeds, Central in relation to Sumrie plc, when he expects to be in a position to say what action will be taken in relation to the information obtained.

Mr. Howard: As soon as possible.

Tin

Mr. Fletcher asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if, in the light of the continuing crisis in the London Metal Exchange and its implications for the financial sector generally and the tin industry in particular, he will make urgent inquiries into the affairs which led to the sudden suspension of the activities of the buffer stock manager and of trading on the Metals Exchange and into the implications for Her Majesty's Government's position as host country to the International Tin Council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Channon: The Government are naturally concerned to obtain the fullest possible information which will assist in their aim of securing an orderly return to trading in tin. The Government, and as appropriate the Bank of England, are holding talks with the various parties concerned, and the International Tin Council has met the banks and the London Metal Exchange to discuss possible solutions to the crisis.

The International Tin Council is to resume its meeting on 2 December and will remain in session until it reaches a definitive solution to the current crisis. Her Majesty's Government will continue their efforts to persuade other member countries to state their willingness to meet their obligations in order that a satisfactory solution to the crisis may be found.

Scales and Weighing Machines

Sir Eldon Griffiths asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish in the Offical Report the planned timetable for implementation of the Eden working party's recommendations on revised pattern approval procedures and self verification, as outlined to the recent conference of the Federation of Scale and Weighing Machine Manufacturers.

Mr. Howard: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Financial Services Bill

Mrs. Peacock asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when Her Majesty's Government expects to introduce the Financial Services Bill.

Mr. Howard: Next month.

General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade

Mrs. Peacock asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what proposals Her Majesty's Government have put forward to the general agreement on tariffs and trade for the forthcoming trade negotiations.

Mr. Channon: The Government have proposed an early launch for the proposed new round of multilateral trade negotiations, with a preparatory committee set up at this week's meeting of the contracting parties to GATT. We shall be negotiating for better access for British exports of goods and services. We want a genuine opening-up of the markets of Japan and the newly-industrialised countries. We want agreed rules for liberalising trade in services, reductions in remaining high tariffs, and more effective GATT dispute — settlement procedures.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish in the Official Report his Department's estimates, for the years 1978 to 1984, for Scotland, Wales, Northern Ireland and the English regions, of the numbers of jobs created by (i) regional policy and (ii) other employment assistance measures, and of the costs per job.

Mr. Peter Morrison [pursuant to his reply, 22 November 1985]: The table below shows the number of jobs expected to be created or safeguarded in the assisted areas by projects receiving offers of regional selective assistance in the years 1978-84 by region and country within Great Britain, and the estimated offer value per job. Estimates on a similar basis are not available for other regional policy measures.

The figures in the table are not comparable with estimates of the number and associated cost of providing net additional jobs in the assisted areas. Such estimates are not available on an annual basis or for a recent period.

The numbers of jobs created by regional policy and employment assistance measures in Northern Ireland, and by employment assistance measures in Great Britain, are matters for, respectively, my right hon. Friends the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland and the Paymaster General.

Pirate Radio Stations

Mr. Greg Knight asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the total cost to public funds during the last 12 months of the surveillance and other activities carried out against off-shore pirate radio stations.

Mr. Butcher [pursuant to his reply, 22 November 1985]: I refer my hon. Friend to the answers I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Worcestershire (Mr. Forth) on 19 November at column 129.

Bankers' Guarantee Scheme

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish in the Official Report a breakdown for each of the last three financial years of the percentages of comprehensive bankers guarantee scheme policyholders with facility values of (a) up to £500,000, (b) £500,000 to £1 million and (c) over £1 million and the percentages of total claims paid under the scheme for each of these categories.

Mr. Channon [pursuant to the reply, 21 November 1985, c. 250]: The comprehensive bankers guarantee scheme embraces two facilities—one for open account transactions and one for bills or notes. The breakdown requested of numbers of policies for each facility is:

Per cent.

Limit of facility	1982-83	1983-84	1984-85
Open account
Below £500,000	91·0	93·0	91·0
£500,000 to £1 million	5·0	4·0	4·5
Above £1 million	4·0	3·0	4·5
Bills notes
Below £500,000	84·0	83·0	86·0
£500,000 to £1 million	7·0	9·0	7·0
Above £1 million	9·0	8·0	7·0

A number of policyholders use both facilities. Information about the percentage of total claims relating to each category is not available in the form requested.

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Asset Holdings

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the hon. Member for Wokingham, as representing the Church Commissioners, if he will publish in the Official Report the shareholdings of the Church Commissioners in excess of £10,000 in any shopping or trading company, detailing the amount held by the Church Commissioners asset committee and the company or trading name, such shareholding relating to United Kingdom based companies only.

Sir William van Straubenzee: As at 31 October 1985 the commissioners held shares in United Kingdom retailing companies as follows:

Company	Shares
Argyll Group	600,000
Associated Dairies Group	1,000,000
Bejam Group	817,916
Boots	875,000
Burton Group	1,522,016

ENERGY

Alternative Energy Sources

13. Mr. Knox asked the Secretary of State for Energy when he next proposes to have discussions with the European Commission about alternative sources of energy.

Mr. David Hunt: I am pleased to say that in recent months the Council of Ministers has agreed substantial new Community programmes on non-nuclear energy research, development and demonstration. These should be of real benefit to British companies and university groups actively pursuing alternative sources of energy.

21. Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for Energy what is his latest estimate of the proportion of the total United Kingdom energy needs which can be met by alternative forms of energy in 1985 and in 10 years time.

Mr. David Hunt: The alternative sources contribute less than 1 per cent. to the United Kingdom's total primary energy supply at present. By the end of the century this contribution could rise to 2 per cent.

Mr. Speller asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make it his policy to hold meetings with representatives of alternative energy interest groups on a regular basis.

Mr. David Hunt: My Department meets with representatives of a wide range of groups with interests in alternative energy sources.

Coal Industry

15. Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he intends to meet the leaders of the National Union of Mineworkers and the Union of Democratic Mineworkers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: I am always willing to meet the leaders of any recognised trade union.

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he has discussed with the chairman of the National Coal Board the implications for the coal industry of recognition by the National Coal Board of the Union of Democratic Mineworkers.

Mr. Peter Walker: The recognition of trade unions within the coal industry is a matter for the NCB. I am sure that it is desirable that mineworkers should be represented by the union of their choice.

Pensioners (Free Fuel)

16. Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for Energy whether he will introduce legislation to provide a Christmas allocation of free fuel for retirement pensioners.

Mr. Goodlad: All domestic consumers will have benefited from the falls in the real prices of fuels that have occurred the last two years. The social security system helps the least well-off with day-to-day expenses, including fuel, and extra help is available for those with special needs.

Gas Industry

17. Mr. Baldry asked the Secretary of State for Energy what provision will be made for employee share ownership upon the privatisation of British Gas.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: All who work in the gas industry will be given positive opportunity to acquire shares.

19. Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on his proposals for the privatisation of British Gas.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: The details of our proposals will be brought before the House shortly.

British Gas Corporation and Electricity Council

20. Mr. Wrigglesworth asked the Secretary of State for Energy when he last met the chairman of the British Gas Corporation and the chairman of the Electricity Council.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: My right hon. Friend and I frequently meet the chairmen of each industry.

23. Mr. Willie W. Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Energy if, when he next meets the chairman of the British Gas Corporation and the Electricity Council, he will raise with them the future level of gas and electricity prices; and if he will make a statement.

25. Mr. Proctor asked the Secretary of State for Energy if, when he next meets the chairman of the Electricity Council, he will raise the subject of the industrial price of electricity.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: I refer to the answer which I gave today to the hon. Member for Stockton, South (Mr. Wrigglesworth). Prices are a matter for the industry concerned.

France (Electricity Exports)

22. Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Energy what representations he has received about exports from France of cheap electricity generated by nuclear power stations.

Mr. Goodlad: I have received no recent representations from members of the public or interested groups.

NCB Chairman

24. Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he has any plans to make the chairmanship of the National Coal Board a part-time position.

27. Mr. Eadie asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he proposes any change in the functions and role of the chairman of the National Coal Board; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: No.

Trent Valley (Power Stations)

26. Mrs. Currie asked the Secretary of State for Energy if when he next meets the chairman of the Central Electricity Generating Board, he will raise with him the building of further coal-fired power stations in the Trent valley.

Mr. Goodlad: The board has stated that it does not intend to make any application for new power stations until the outcome of the Sizewell inquiry is known.

Manufacturing Industry

28. Mr. Favell asked the Secretary of State for Energy what assessment he has made of the contributions made by the gas, coal and electricity industries towards the drive for greater productivity in the manufacturing industry.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: I refer to the answer which I gave to my hon. Friend on 28 October 1985 at column 650, in which I indicated that labour productivity generally in the public sector energy industries had improved since 1980. This will have contributed towards cost control and overall productivity in the manufacturing sector.

Leicester (Combined Heat and Power)

29. Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on current progress of the feasibility study on combined heat and power in Leicester; and how this progress compares with the feasibility studies in respect of other cities.

Mr. David Hunt: Agreements between Belfast, Edinburgh and Leicester consortia and the Secretary of State for Energy for grant aid towards the preparation of prospectuses have been signed. The consortia's work programmes, which differ in some respects, began in April and are on schedule. The consortia expects to complete its programmes over the next 12 months.

Electricity Industry

30. Mr. Portillo asked the Secretary of State for Energy when he proposes to announce plans for privatising the electricity industry.

Mr. Goodlad: There are no present plans to privatise the electricity supply industry.

Redundant Mineworkers' Scheme

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for Energy when he intends to bring forward proposals under section 3 of the Coal Industry Act 1975 to enable the redundant mineworkers' payments scheme to continue into the 1986-87 financial year.

Mr. David Hunt: My right hon. Friend has made it clear that no decisions have yet been made on the details of any new scheme to succeed the current redundant mineworkers' payments scheme.

Energy Efficiency Year

31. Mr. Rost asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on progress on his plans for Energy Efficiency Year in 1986.

Mr. Peter Walker: During the year the Department will be launching a new version of its breakfast briefings for chief executives; its monergy roadshow will cover towns across the country. The events already organised by outside firms and organisations—again covering every corner of the country — will play a vital role in converting the awareness aroused by our national campaign into action at the level of the firm, the local authority, hospitals and other institutional consumers, and the householder.

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he is satisfied with the progress to date of Energy Efficiency Year plans.

Mr. David Hunt: During the year the Department will be launching a new version of its breakfast briefings for chief executives; its monergy roadshow will cover towns across the country. The events already organised by outside firms and organsations—again covering every corner of the country — will play a vital role in converting the awareness aroused by our national campaign into action at the level of the firm, the local authority, hospitals and other institutional consumers, and the householder.

Energy Policy

Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on his energy policy in the light of the conclusions contained in the evidence submitted by the Council for the Protection of Rural England to the Energy Committee (H.C., 1984-85, No. 87), a copy of which has been sent to him, regarding the relative cost-effectiveness of investment in a national programme of energy conservation, on the one hand, and a series of orders for pressurised water nuclear reactors, on the other.

Mr. David Hunt: The Government's energy policy aims to ensure that all economic forms of energy are produced, supplied and used as efficiently as possible. The aim of our energy efficiency campaign is to make consumers aware of the enormous potential for economic conservation in all sectors of the energy market. Decisions on Sizewell B must await consideration of the inspector's report, which has not yet been submitted.

Windscale

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy whether he will list for each year since 1973 (a) the amount of plutonium passing through the material balance area at Windscale not open to safeguards inspectors and (b) the reactors of origin of the plutonium.

Mr. Goodlad: The material balance area processed by civil and defence plutonium during this period; it would not be in the national interest to disclose the amount of plutonium processed. Most of the re-processed fuel came from magnox reactors. A small amount came from a pilot oxide fuel head-end plant which ceased operation during 1973.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy which of the nuclear material balance areas at Windscale is prohibited to entry by nuclear safeguard inspectors.

Mr. Goodlad: The Euratom inspectors are at present excluded from the civil-military nuclear material balance area at BNFL Sellafield.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the issues that remain unresolved by Her Majesty's Government and the European Commission with regard to the implementation of a full safeguard inspection régime by the Euratom inspectorate of all nuclear materials processed at Windscale arising from the electricity boards' reactors.

Mr. Goodlad: I have nothing to add to my reply to the hon. Member on 4 April 1985 at column 694.

Electricity Prices

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Energy if, when he next meets the chairman of the Electricity Council, he will raise with him the increases in electricity prices proposed for the coming year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: I frequently meet the chairman of the electricity Council. Prices are a matter for the industry to decide.

TRANSPORT

M1 (Signpost 13)

Mr. Harrison asked the Secretary of State for Transport on what date junction signpost 13 on the southbound section of the M1 motorway between Wakefield and London was reported damaged; and on what date it will be repaired.

Mr. Ridley: The sign was first reported damaged by the right hon. Gentleman's question. The damage is slight. The sign is due to be replaced in early January as part of the general sign replacement programme on this section of the M1.

Disabled Persons (Station Facilities)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Transport what provision he is making for continuation of the funding of the joint BR/GLC scheme to provide improved access facilities for the disabled at stations in Greater London following the abolition of the Greater London council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: I am confident that funding schemes of this kind will, after abolition of the GLC, be better handled by the London boroughs concerned. They already have powers to do this under section 59 of the London Regional Transport Act 1984.

M23/M25

Mr. Harrison asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give the reason why, six weeks after the Reigate/Wisley sections of the M25 were opened to traffic, the signposts on the M23 northbound at the junction with the M25 only indicates Sutton as the destination to the west and does not give the direct route to the North.

Mr. Ridley: New signs directing traffic west to Sutton and Heathrow and east to Dartford and Sevenoaks will be erected shortly. The delay arose because it was thought desirable to provide more signs than was originally planned.

Road Accidents (Compensation)

Mr. Weetch asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will introduce legislation to establish a Government funded no-fault system of compensation for road accidents; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: The Government have no proposals to change the law of liability in this way. Such a system would have considerable public expenditure implications and invidiously discriminate among accident victims depending on whether they were injured on the roads or elsewhere.

British Transport (Advertising)

Mr. Gregory asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has had any representations concerning possible private sector involvement in British Transport advertising.

Mr. David Mitchell: We have received several representations from private sector companies seeking involvement in British Transport Advertising Limited and from members of staff about possible purchase of BTA and the implications for them if BTA is sold to the private sector. British Rail and the National Bus Company are in the lead in considering the future of BTA. I understand that they intend to invite competitive bids for the whole of the current business.

Mr. Bernard Christopher Kennedy (Driving Licence)

Sir Eldon Griffiths asked the Secretary of State for Transport how long the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Centre has held Bernard Christopher Kennedy's driving licence; and why this has not been returned to Mr. Kennedy suitably corrected.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Mr. Kennedy's licence has been held at the centre since January 1985. Mr. Kennedy notified a correction to his date of birth which meant that his licence had to be regarded as expiring on his seventieth birthday in December 1984. He was invited to apply for its renewal and did so in March. Due to a clerical oversight incorrect action was taken on the application.

I apologise for the inconvenience caused to Mr. Kennedy and am glad to report that his licence was sent to him on 22 November. Those concerned will be reminded of the serious consequences and inconvenience which can be caused when correct procedures are not followed.

Heavy Goods Vehicles

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Transport what steps his Department takes to check on the roadworthiness of heavy goods vehicles; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: All heavy goods vehicles over 30 cwt unladen weight, except for a few special exemptions, are subject to an annual roadworthiness inspection conducted in one of the Department's 91 heavy goods vehicle testing stations.

This test includes all major safety components on both motor vehicles and trailers and comprises 66 areas of inspection. Details are set out in the goods vehicle tester's manual, published by Her Majesty's Stationery Office.

Goods vehicles are subject to a roadside spot check by examiners from the Vehicle Inspectorate. A defective vehicle may be prohibited from use immediately or with delayed effect depending upon the severity of the defect. Each prohibition must be cleared by a further inspection which usually takes place at a heavy goods vehicle testing station. Over 42,000 vehicles were spot checked last year, of which about 6 per cent. were issued with an immediate prohibition and a further 13 per cent. with delayed prohibitions.

Other goods vehicle inspections are carried out by vehicle examiners on private premises or at HGV testing stations usually in connection with operator's licensing. Vehicles found to be defective may be prohibited. In addition the whole fleet may be subjected to an inspection, and a review may also be undertaken of the operator's maintenance arrangements. The results of such checks are provided to the Licensing Authority for his use in decisions regarding the grant or revocation of the operator's licence.

Mr. Lord asked the Secretary of State for Transport what percentage of all recorded motor vehicle accidents in the United Kingdom in the last five years involved heavy lorries.

Mrs. Chalker: Data are held centrally for Great Britain only. For the years 1982, 1983 and 1984 the figure was 5 per cent. Further years could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Lord asked the Secretary of State for Transport what percentage of recorded motor vehicle accidents on motorways in the last five years involved heavy lorries.

Mrs. Chalker: For the years 1982, 1983 and 1984 the percentages are 20, 20 and 19 respectively. Further years could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Lord asked the Secretary of State for Transport what percentage of recorded motor vehicle accidents on trunk roads in the last five years involved heavy lorries.

Mrs. Chalker: Data on accidents on trunk roads are readily available for England only, for 1983 and 1984. The figure for both 1983 and 1984 was 12 per cent.

Mr. Lord asked the Secretary of State for Transport what percentage of all recorded motor vehicle accidents in the United Kingdom in the last five years involved lorries registered outside the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Chalker: Data are only held centrally for Great Britain. For the years 1982, 1983 and 1984 the figures are 0·08, 0·08, 0·09 per cent. respectively. Further years' data could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Road Safety Committees

Mr. O'Brien asked the Secretary of State for Transport what provisions are made for road safety committees to continue, following the abolition of the metropolitan county councils.

Mrs. Chalker: It is for successor authorities to determine the arrangements they will need to fulfill their statutory obligations for road safety, including whatever they consider appropriate in respect of road safety committees. The Department has issued advice for metropolitan district councils on road safety issues to help them in their formulation of the necessary local framework to deal with their new responsibilities. Regional offices of the Department stand ready to provide further advice on particular local matters.

Speed Limit

Mr. Lord asked the Secretary of State for Transport if his Department has carried out any estimate of the effect on the number of road accidents from lowering the speed limit to 60 mph on all roads in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: Only 5 per cent. of accidents occur on roads with a speed limit of more than 60 mph. If the limit on these roads were reduced to 60 mph and all drivers observed the limit, one might expect a reduction in the number of accidents. No estimate of the extent of the reductions is possible because it is not clear how far, without a massive enforcement effort, drivers would voluntarily comply with the limit.

Mr. Lord asked the Secretary of State for Transport if his Department has carried out any estimate of the savings in fuel costs which could result from a lowering of the speed limit to 60 mph on all roads in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: We estimate that the lowering of the speed limit on motorways and dual carriageways from 70 mph to 60 mph—if reflected in a reduction in actual speeds of cars—would result in a reduction of about 2 per cent. in total petrol consumed by cars using all roads.

Roads (Langbaurgh)

Mr. Holt asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to designate any road in Langbaurgh as a trunk road; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. Friend has no proposals at present to designate any road in Langbaurgh as a trunk road.

Marylebone/Northolt Park Line

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to receive the inspector's report on the proposal to close the Marylebone-Northolt Park line and to make a decision thereon; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: Under the statutory closure procedures it will be for the London regional passengers committee to submit a report to my right hon. Friend. The committee will hold a public hearing before submitting its report but a date has not yet been fixed.

Trunk Roads (Safety Fencing)

Mr. Holt asked the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to the answer of 11 November, Official Report, column 303, when he expects the review of safety fencing on trunk roads to be completed; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: The review relates to the criteria for the provision of central reserve safety fences and will be completed in about six months' time.

Pneumatic Tyres

Mrs. Peacock asked the Secretary of State for Transport if Her Majesty's Government are satisfied with the safety of imported pneumatic tyres; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: Both imported and United Kingdom manufactured car tyres must meet the same international Standard prescribed in ECE regulation 30. We made regulations last year to prohibit the sale of substandard tyres, whether new or second-hand; enforcement of these regulations is the responsibility of trading standards officers. I have recently advised motorists to check the condition and markings on second-hand tyres before purchase.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Argentina

Mr. Steel asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commowealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to remove any restrictions concerning British companies wishing to tender for oil exploration contracts in Argentina.

Mr. Eggar: We impose no restrictions on British companies wishing to tender for oil exploration contracts in Argentina. We have taken a number of measures aimed at a mutual lifting of restrictions affecting financial and commercial relations between the United Kingdom and Argentina. The Argentine Government have however reciprocated only partially.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Arnold asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the responsibilities of each of the deputy secretaries in his Department and the numbers and ranks of staff reporting to each.

Mr. Eggar: The information is as follows:

DIPLOMATIC WING:

Deputy under-secretary:
Relations with all countries in Europe; European Community (political co-operation); labour matters and co-ordination of planning: two assistant under-secretaries and 69 other staff.

Deputy under-secretary
Trade and economic relations; United Nations; energy, science, space, maritime, aviation and environment matters: two assistant under-secretaries and 142 other staff.

Deputy under-secretary
Personnel, finance, communications, office services, overseas estate, protocol, news and information matters; cultural relations; consular, migration and nationality questions; relations with Parliament: five assistant under-secretaries and 2,574 other staff.

Deputy under-secretary:
Relations with all countries in the Americas, the Caribbean, Australasia and Asia: two assistant under-secretaries and 148 other staff.

Deputy under-secretary:
Relations with all countries in Africa and the near and middle east; Commonwealth co-ordination: two assistant under-secretaries and 107 other staff.

Deputy under-secretary:
Relations with the Republic of Ireland; arms control, disarmament and defence matters; service advisers and attaches; security co-ordination: two assistant under-secretaries and 109 other staff.

AID WING

Deputy secretary
Bilateral, multilateral and functional aid; overseas manpower services; overseas service pensions: five under-secretaries and 880 other staff.

Arms Control

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the arms control agreements and treaties to which Her Majesty's Government are a signatory.

Mr. Renton: We are a signatory to the following arms control agreements and treaties:

The protocol for the prohibition of the use in war of asphyxiating, poisonous or other gases, and of bacteriological methods of warfare of 1925 (the Geneva protocol);

the Antarctic Treaty of 1959; the treaty banning nuclear weapon tests in the atmosphere, in outer space and under water of 1963 (the partial test ban treaty);
the treaty on principles governing the activities of states in the exploration and use of outer space including the moon and other celestial bodies of 1967 (the outer space treaty);
the additional protocols of the treaty for the prohibition of nuclear weapons in Latin America of 1967 (the treaty of Tlatelolco);
the agreement concerning the establishment of a direct communication link between the residence of the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom in London and the Kremlin of 1967 (the Soviet Union-United Kingdom hotline agreement);
the treaty on the non-proliferation of nuclear weapons of 1968;
the treaty on the prohibition of the emplacement of nuclear weapons and other weapons of mass destruction on the seabed and the ocean floor and in the subsoil thereof of 1971 (the seabed treaty);
the convention on the prohibition of the development, production and stockpiling of bacteriological (biological) and toxin weapons and on their destruction of 1972 (the biological weapons convention);
the convention on the prohibition of military or any other hostile use of environmental modification techniques of 1977 (the ENMOD convention);
the (Soviet-United Kingdom) agreement on the prevention of accidental nuclear war of 1977;
the convention on prohibition or restrictions on the use of certain conventional weapons which may be deemed to be excessively injurious or to have indiscriminate effects of 1981 (the UN weaponry convention).

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to seek to secure a new comprehensive test ban treaty.

Mr. Renton: In July we tabled a paper at the conference on disarmament in Geneva as a contribution to discussion of the outstanding problems of verification. In our view, solutions to these problems must be available before any comprehensive test ban treaty can be negotiated. The United Kingdom also joined western partners at the CD in proposing a mandate for an ad hoc committee at the CD to examine verification and other aspects of a comprehensive test ban with a view to negotiation. Unfortunately others have not so far agreed to this.

Nicaragua

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on recent co-operation with Nicaragua in relation to United Kingdom assistance to Colombia following the recent disaster.

Mr. Eggar: Nicaragua, like other countries in the region, co-operated promptly in providing landing and refuelling facilities for two Puma helicopters from Belize that transited through Nicaragua on their way to Colombia to provide assistance in the recent disaster. The short delay in obtaining Nicaraguan authorisation was due to communications difficulties associated with a revision of the helicopters' flight plan.

Nigeria

Mr. Sedgemore asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he or his officials have had any discussions since 1981 with the Nigerian authorities over trade in relation to export credit guarantees or other trade involving alleged frauds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: Neither my right hon. and learned Friend nor our officials have discussed alleged trade frauds with the Nigerian authorities. The Nigerian high commission asked the Foreign and Commonwealth Office in September 1983 to put Nigerian police officers visiting the United Kingdom into contact with the United Kingdom police authorities to investigate alleged frauds involving forged export documents. The Nigerians were given the name of the appropriate police officer.

Mr. Sedgemore asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if his Department's assistance was sought to help members of the fraud squad to go to Nigeria to investigate alleged fraud in relation to trade; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: Yes, in July 1985 by the City of London police. The Nigerian authorities were approached accordingly but a visit has not yet taken place.

Hong Kong

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if any discussions have taken place with the Chinese Government concerning the 1,300 families of boat people living in Hong Kong waters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: There have been discussions with the Chinese Government about the 14 boat wives from the Yau Ma Tei typhoon shelter who returned to China on 8 August and 24 October 1985. No other discussions with the Chinese Government on the boat-dwelling families in Hong Kong have taken place.

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the current state of human rights and civil liberties in Hong Kong.

Mr. Renton: Both the international covenant on civil and political rights and the international covenant on economic, social and cultural rights apply to Hong Kong.

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the age groups of children born in Hong Kong waters whose parents have been notified that they are liable to deportation.

Mr. Renton: In the families of the 14 boat wives who were asked to leave Hong Kong, none of the children were born in Hong Kong waters. Of the total of 29 children born to these 14 wives, 21 were born on land in Hong Kong. Their ages range from a few months to four years.

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs in the case of how many children born in Hong Kong territorial waters their parents have been notified that they are liable to deportation; and what is their current citizenship status.

Mr. Renton: All of the 21 children born in Hong Kong are Hong Kong British dependent territories citizens with right to land in Hong Kong, because they were born in Hong Kong to a parent (father) who had achieved settled status in Hong Kong.

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the policy of the Hong Kong Government towards immigration by boat people.

Mr. Renton: Vietnamese boat people who seek asylum in Hong Kong are allowed to remain temporarily in the territory, pending overseas resettlement. The Hong Kong Government only admit immigrants from China if they have been issued with one-way Chinese exit permits by the Chinese authorities. All illegal immigrants are liable to be repatriated.

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has as to whether the boat people's families currently in Hong Kong were allowed to leave China and as to whether their Chinese citizenship status has been cancelled by the Chinese Government.

Mr. Renton: Fourteen boat wives who had been living in the Yau Ma Tei typhoon shelter and were found to be illegal immigrants in Hong Kong returned to China in August and October 1985. Their families remaining in Hong Kong are legal residents of Hong Kong. The wives who returned to China did not possess Chinese one-way exit permits. We understand that their Chinese nationality status and household registrations have not been cancelled by the Chinese Government.

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what basis it has been decided by the Hong Kong Government that wives of boatmen in Hong Kong waters are not allowed on land except in case of serious illness.

Mr. Renton: Boat-dwelling wives who are legal residents of Hong Kong may come ashore any time. Boat-dwelling wives who are in Hong Kong without the permission of the director of immigration are illegal immigrants. They are allowed ashore only in exceptional circumstances.

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has as to how many boat people have drowned in Hong Kong waters in each of the past five years.

Mr. Renton: Information on the number of boat people drowned in Hong Kong waters is not available, but the Hong Kong Government believe the figure to be very small.

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations the Hong Kong Government have received from the boat brides support committee concerning the proposed deportation of certain boat women; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: The Hong Kong Government have received representations from various groups supporting the request made by the 14 wives from the Yau Ma Tei typhoon shelter for permission to remain in Hong Kong. These groups include the Society for Community Organisation, the Hong Kong federation of Catholic students, the husbands of the wives, various Catholic priests and the Catholic bishop of Hong Kong. In response to these representations the Hong Kong Government have pointed out that a legal channel, the one-way permit system, exists for residents of China to enter Hong Kong to join relatives; that in 1983 and 1984 30 per cent. of the one-way permits each year were issued to wives joining husbands; and that the position of the 14 wives from the Yau Ma Tei typhoon shelter was essentially no different from that of other illegal immigrants from China residing in Hong Kong without the permission of the director of immigration, whether dwelling on boats or on land.

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs why the 14 boatwomen who petitioned the Hong Kong Government about its immigration policy in respect of boat people have now been deported.

Mr. Renton: The 14 wives who petitioned the Hong Kong Government for permission to remain in Hong Kong have not been deported. They left voluntarily on 8 August and 24 October 1985.

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how long the 14 women living on boats in Hong Kong waters, who have now been deported, had been there prior to their deportation.

Mr. Renton: Prior to their departure, the 14 wives had lived in Hong Kong waters from various periods ranging from, two and half years to four and a half years.

Mr. Sedgemore asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if any entry visas have been granted to members of the Nigerian police or Nigerian Security Organisation to investigate alleged fraud in relation to trade in any of the years 1983, 1984 and 1985 to the present day.

Mr. Eggar: We are not aware of any cases of such visits where prior entry clearance has been sought.

It is not mandatory for Nigerian citizens visiting the United Kingdom to obtain prior entry clearances.

British Crown Colonies

Mr. Proctor asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government will continue to provide reports and official information about British Crown colonies to the United Nations Organisation; on what basis such information is presently given; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: We shall continue to provide the United Nations with information on conditions in the United Kingdom dependent territories, in fulfilment of our obligations under article 73(e) of the United Nations Charter.

International Year of Peace

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government intends to set up a national committee to co-ordinate the programme of the 1986 International Year of Peace declared by the United General Assembly on 24 October.

Mr. Eggar: No.

Western European Union

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his policy towards the Western European Union.

Mr. Renton: The Western European Union provides a unique forum for political consultation between the Foreign and Defence Ministers of member countries on a wide range of defence and security issues of importance to Europe. We aim through the WEU to improve European security co-operation, thus strengthening the European pillar of the North Atlantic Alliance, which remains the cornerstone of our security.

Immigration

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) how many applications for entry clearance in Bangladesh from the reapplicants' queue are interviewed on average each week;

(2) how many interviews are conducted in one day by an entry clearance officer at each post in the Indian sub-continent;

(3) how many applicants for entry clearance for settlement are interviewed on average each week at each post in the Indian sub-continent;

(4) what proportion of applications for entry clearance for settlement in the Indian sub-continent is in the reapplications queue;

(5) how many applicants in Bangladesh for entry clearance for settlement have been allocated to the reapplicants' queue.

Mr. Eggar: The information is not readily available. We are consulting the posts concerned. I shall reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many entry clearance officers are currently employed at each post in the Indian sub-continent.

Mr. Eggar: The information is as follows:

	Number
Dhaka	*15
New Delhi	†4
Bombay	5
Calcutta	1
Islamabad	14
Karachi	1

* Plus six on temporary attachment.
† Plus one on temporary attachment.

CIVIL SERVICE

Outside Appointments

Mr. Wrigglesworth asked the Minister for the Civil Service how many candidates from outside the Civil Service have been recruited at grade 6 level and each grade above in 1979, 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983, 1984 and 1985 to date.

Mr. Luce: The information requested for the years 1979-84 is given in the table. No data is, at present, available centrally for 1985. Some of the data for 1984 may be subject to correction because of late departmental returns.

Level	1979	1980	1981	1982	1983	1984

SCOTLAND

NHS Services (Expenditure)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give for each year since 1979 the percentage of the expenditure on (a) medical and surgical equipment maintenance, (b) X-ray equipment maintenance, (c) laboratory equipment maintenance, (d) catering, (e) laundry, (f) cleaning, (g) engineering maintenance, (h) building maintenance, (i) grounds and so on, maintenance, (j) vehicle maintenance and (k) computers, which has been paid to private contractors for services provided to the National Health Service in Scotland.

Mr. John MacKay: Information on total expenditure in these areas is not readily available. Nor do health board accounts distinguish expenditure on services provided by private companies.

Tendering Exercises

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give, for each tendering exercise for hospital ancillary services of which his Department is aware (a) the health board concerned, (b) the hospital concerned, (c) the service concerned (laundry, catering or cleaning), (d) the successful tenderer and (e) the saving achieved over the cost in the previous year.

Mr. John MacKay: Health boards are presently engaged in seeking and assessing competitive tenders for support services in a range of premises, including hospitals.

Health Boards (Expenditure)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will give, for each health board in 1984-85, the total expenditure on cleaning, the total expenditure on services provided by private cleaning companies, the latter figure as a percentage of the former, and the difference between that percentage and the percentage in the previous year;

(2) if he will give for each health board in 1984-85 the total expenditure on catering, the total expenditure on services provided by private cleaning companies, the latter figure as a percentage of the former and the difference between that percentage and the percentage in the previous year;

(3) if he will give for each health board in 1984-85 the total expenditure on laundry, the total expenditure on services provided by private laundry companies, the latter figure as a percentage of the former and the difference between that percentage and the percentage on the previous year.

Mr. John MacKay: Health board accounts do not distinguish expenditure on services provided by private companies. The following was the total expenditure by health boards on cleaning, catering and laundry services in 1984-85.

Board	Cleaning £	Catering £	Laundry £
Argyll and Clyde	3,937,397	4,423,165	1,318,806

Ambulance Service

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give for each year since 1979 the number of ambulance service journeys in Scotland carrying non-National Health Service patients and the total mileage involved.

Mr. John MacKay: The information is not available in precisely the form requested. The following table shows the mileage for all journeys by ambulances on non-NHS business, including journeys for ambulances hired for attendance at occasions such as sporting events.

Year	Non-NHS patients carried	Total Mileage
1979	323	9,571
1980	367	12,050
1981	325	12,467
1982	333	12,655
1983	332	12,727
1984	410	14,290

In 1984 the Scottish ambulance service carried more than two million patients and ambulances travelled over 15 million miles.

Private Hospitals and Nursing Homes

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the private hospitals and nursing homes in Scotland which treat National Health Service patients under contractual arrangements with health boards.

Mr. John MacKay: The latest available information, which relates to 31 March 1984, is as follows:

Argyll and Clyde
- Princess Louise hospital, Bishopton
- St. Mary's Private hospital, Barrhead

Borders
- St. Aidan's private hospital, Melrose
- St. Mary's hospital, Galashiels

Greater Glasgow
- Jewish Old Age, Newark Drive
- St. Margaret's hospital, Clydebank
- Marie Curie Memorial, Glasgow

Highland
- St. Vincents home, Kingussie

Lanarkshire
- Assumption house, Airdrie
- St. Mary's convalescent home, Lanark
- St. Charles private hospital, Carstairs

Lothian
- St. Columba's hospice, Edinburgh
- St. Joseph's hospital, Rosewell
- Queensberry house, Edinburgh
- Fairmile nursing home, Edinburgh

Health Board Statistics

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give, for each year since 1979, for each health board and for Scotland as whole, the number of deaths and discharges among, and the number of beds occupied on a given date by, patients receiving treatment under contractual arrangements with institutions outside the National Health Service, breaking the figures down by category of patient treated.

Mr. John MacKay: The information requested is as follows:

A. Deaths and discharges: year ending 30 September

Patient Care (Expenditure)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give for each health board and for Scotland as a whole the expenditure on contractual arrangements for patient care in each year since 1979.

Mr. John MacKay: The costs of maintaining patients in hospitals not vested in the Secretary of State are as follows:

£'000s

Private Patients

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list, for each year since 1979, the health boards for which statutory auditors have issued reports of poor control over private patient income.

Mr. John MacKay: No accounts of health boards have been qualified by the statutory auditor in respect of control over private patient income in the period in question.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give, for 1984-85 and for each health board, the number of authorised pay beds at the end of the year and their average daily occupancy by private patients, expressed both as a number of beds and as a percentage; and if he will give the 1983-84 figures for comparison.

Mr. John MacKay: The information is set out in the table.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give, for each year since 1970 and for each health board, the number of attendances by (a) private outpatients, (b) private day cases and (c) private regular day cases.

Mr. John MacKay: This information is not available centrally.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give, for each year since 1979 and for each health board (a) the income from private resident patients, (b) the amount written off as bad debts from private resident patients, (c) the income from private non-resident patients and (d) the amount written off as bad debts from private non-resident patients.

Mr. John MacKay: The information available is set out in the table. Central information on amounts written off as bad debts does not distinguish between resident and non-resident patients.

Amenity Beds

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give for each health board the number of (a) amenity beds, (b) discharges and deaths from amenity beds, (c) the amenity beds occupied on average, (d) the percentage occupancy and (e) the income from amenity patients in 1983 and 1984.

Mr. John MacKay: Records are not available centrally of the number of beds which can be used as amenity beds or of the number of patients using such facilities. The number of such beds is however small compared to the overall provision by health boards.

The income derived from the use of amenity beds in 1983 and 1984 is as follows:

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give, for each year since 1970 and for each health board, the total number of consultants holding (a) full-time, (b) maximum part-time, (c) other part-time and (d) honorary contracts.

Mr. John MacKay: For years before 1976 the information is not available by health board and is shown on an all Scotland basis in table 1. The information available for the years 1976 to 1980 is in table 2. The information in the form requested is available only for the years 1981 to 1984 and is in table 3.

Private Hospitals

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals for private hospital developments have been notified to or authorised by him under the Health Services Act 1976 as amended by the Health Services Act 1980 since 1 May.

Mr. John MacKay: None.

Scottish Examination Board

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report a statistical breakdown of the total number of official markers for the 1984 Scottish Examination Board certificate examinations which details (a) the number of markers who were otherwise employed as college lecturers, (b) the number of markers who were otherwise employed as full-time teachers, (c) the number of markers who were retired college lecturers, and (d) the number of markers who were retired school teachers.

Mr. Allan Stewart: To prepare a breakdown in the categories requested, the Scottish Examination Board will require to scrutinise the records of their current and former markers individually, some 12,000 in all. I have asked it to do so, and will reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether the current industrial dispute in Scottish teaching has led to a dilution of the qualifications normally required for engagement as an official marker with the Scottish Examination Board.

Mr. Allan Stewart: As I indicated in my answer of 17 June 1985 to the hon. Member for Dundee, East (Mr. Wilson) at column 31, the Scottish Examination Board has not relaxed the qualifications required for appointment as markers of Scottish Certificate of Education (SCE) examination scripts. These are at least three years' experience of presenting pupils for the SCE or three years' examining experience in tertiary education in Scotland.

School Closures

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will publish a table giving figures region by region of the schools that have been closed since 1979, as a result of the drop in the school rolls.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Legionnaire's Disease

Mr. McTaggart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report current and past research projects since 1955 into the causes, means of transmission and treatment of Legionnaire's disease in Scotland.

Mr. John MacKay: Information about projects funded by the Scottish Home and Health Department is set out in the table.

Project	Research Body	Grant £	Date commenced	Date completed
1. To obtain further information about the incidence of Legionnaire's disease in Scotland	University of Glasgow Department of Infectious Diseases, Ruchill Hospital, Glasgow	5,933	1979	1980
2. Investigation into Legionnaire's disease and other infections among package tourists and other travellers (extension of No. 1)	As above	5,746	1980	1982

Note: The disease was not recognised as a specific entity until 1977.
The Scottish Home and Health Department is willing to receive applications for funds to support soundly based research proposals through its research grants scheme.

Mr. McTaggart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the guidelines sent by his Department (a) to health boards and (b) to local authorities about keeping cooling towers clean.

Mr. John MacKay: A copy of the guidance relating to Legionnaire's disease and hospital water systems issued to health boards in 1980, and re-issued earlier this year, has been placed in the Library. No guidance on this matter has been issued to local authorities in Scotland.

Mr. McTaggart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if any doctors from the communicable disease surveillance centre at Colindale have been asked to help the Greater Glasgow health board with its investigation into the causes of the current outbreak of Legionnaire's disease at Glasgow royal infirmary and elsewhere in Glasgow.

Mr. John MacKay: No; but I am satisfied that Greater Glasgow health board is well able to conduct these investigations and that it will seek such outside advice as it considers necessary.

Mr. McTaggart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report the number of deaths from Legionnaire's disease in (a) the Greater Glasgow health board area and (b) Scotland in each of the past 10 years and if he will detail in each year the months in which those deaths occurred.

Mr. John MacKay: The term Legionnaire's disease was not used before 1978. The numbers of deaths reported to the Registrar General from 1978 to 1985, in which the underlying cause of death was recorded as Legionnaire's disease, are given in the tables. As is the usual practice in the recording of deaths by the Registrar General the figures relate to the area of residence of the deceased and not to the area where they died. The figures for 1985 are provisional.

Mr. McTaggart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will fund a research project into the role played by building design in the spread of Legionnaire's disease in Scotland.

Mr. John MacKay: The public health laboratory service was commissioned by the Department of Health and Social Security in 1981 to undertake an extensive environmental study into Legionnaire's disease. The Health Departments will consider the need for further research in the light of the report on the study and the results of the public inquiry into the outbreak at Stafford district general hospital.

Health Departments will also take into account the findings of the investigation being undertaken by Greater Glasgow health board.

Mr. McTaggart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received from residents of the constituency of Glasgow central about deaths resulting from Legionnaire's disease (a) at Glasgow royal infirmary and (b) in housing blocks adjacent to the infirmary.

Mr. John MacKay: None.

Mr. McTaggart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what evidence his Department has compiled about the relative incidence of Legionnaire's disease among people living (a) in modern buildings with air conditioning and showers and (b) in other buildings.

Mr. John MacKay: Data are not collected centrally about the type of accommodation in which patients live.

Infection Control Officers

Mr. McTaggart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the number of infection control officers designated within the Greater Glasgow health board area along with the number of hospitals for which they are responsible; and if he will list any hospitals within the area which do not have a designated infection control officer.

Mr. John MacKay: This is a matter for the Greater Glasgow health board and the information is not available centrally.

Community Medicine (Glasgow)

Mr. McTaggart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report the number of doctors working full-time and part-time in community medicine within the Greater Glasgow health board area, the number of such doctors involved in the epidemiology of infectious diseases, the equivalent number of such doctors deployed in other health board areas and the number of community medical officers per head of population in each health board area.

Mr. John MacKay: Information is not held centrally which would identify the number of specialists in community medicine who are involved in the epidemiology of infectious diseases.

The latest available information requested about staff numbers is as follows:

Wildlife (Poisons)

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many reports of incidents involving the misuse of poisons or stupefying substances on wildlife have been reported to his Department in 1983, 1984 and 1985, to the most recent date for which figures are available; and in how many cases the details were passed to the police for investigation.

Mr. John MacKay: In the years 1983, 1984 and 1985 to date, 44, 24 and 30 reports have been received by the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland of incidents where poisons or stupefying substances were misused with the intention of killing wildlife, including cats and dogs. Details of 11, 1 and 4 cases have been reported in the respective years to the police by the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland. Information on incidents reported to the police by other persons or bodies is not available.

Housing Associations

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total number of properties owned by housing associations in Scotland; how many of these properties have been sold to tenants in the last five years for which records are available; and what percentage of the total number the number sold represents.

Mr. Younger: It is estimated that, at 31 March 1985, registered housing associations in Scotland owned some 36,900 properties, of which approximately 28,500 were general needs houses. The number of houses sold to sitting tenants in the five years to that date is shown in the table.

The total sales represent 0·23 per cent. of the total housing stock.

Year	No. of Sales
1980-81	nil
1981-82	nil
1982-83	25
1983-84	45
1984-85	13
Total	83

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the total Government contribution to the budgets of Scottish housing associations in each of the last five years for which records are available.

Mr. Younger: Finance for housing association capital projects is provided initially through short-term lending by the Housing Corporation and through a smaller programme of lending by local authorities. Total capital expenditure by the housing association movement in Scotland in each financial year since 1980-81 is shown in table A.

Table A

Financial Year	£ million
1980-81	72·48
1981-82	96·04
1982-83	117·76
1983-84	118·22
1984-85	108·35

The estimated expenditure for 1985-86 is £110·55 million.

As each project reaches completion, the short-term loan is replaced by housing association grant (HAG) and a long-term loan from the Housing Corporation or the local authority. HAG normally meets some 85 per cent. to 90 per cent. of the cost of the project. Total expenditure on housing association grants and payments under the earlier subsidy arrangements by the Government to the housing association movement in Scotland in each financial year since 1980-81 is shown in table B.

Table B

Financial Year	£ million
1980-81	50·61
1981-82	82·80
1982-83	104·17
1983-84	115·75
1984-85	127·68

The estimated expenditure for 1985-86 is £114·23 million.

Finally, there is a number of revenue-related grants paid by the Scottish Development Department for which associations may qualify according to their circumstances.

AIDS

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what cash specifically earmarked to each of the haemophiliac reference centres to deal with acquired immunine deficiency syndrome; how much cash is set aside for personal counselling; and if he will make a statement on the contribution of social work services to the reference centres.

Mr. John MacKay [pursuant to his reply, 22 November 1985]: Both the haemophiliac reference centres in Scotland are closely involved in work relating to AIDS, but they are not separately funded for any of their functions. Although social work departments are not directly concerned with the work of the centres they are able to contribute their special skills in supporting the families of haemophiliacs.

WALES

Housing Statistics

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Wales what was the current expenditure in constant terms on repair and renovation of (a) private sector and (b) public sector housing in (i) 1978-79 and (ii) the last year for which figures are available expressed (x) in financial terms and (y) as a percentage of local authority current expenditure on housing.

Mr. Mark Robinson: In 1978-79 local authorities' current expenditure on repairs and maintenance of their own stock of housing charged to their housing revenue accounts was £60·8 million at 1984-85 prices, 22·6 per cent. of their total HRA expenditure. In 1984-85, local authorities budgeted to spend £74·0 million, 28·5 per cent. of their total budgeted HRA expenditure.

There was no local authority current expenditure directly on repair and renovation of private sector housing in either year.

Mr. Keith Best asked the Secretary of State for Wales what was the capital expenditure in constant terms on repair and renovation of (a) private sector and (b) public sector housing in (i) 1978-79 and (ii) the last year for which figures are available expressed (x) in financial terms and (y) as a percentage of local authority capital expenditure on housing.

Mr. Mark Robinson: Local authorities' capital expenditure on the repair and renovation of private sector dwellings in 1978-79 was £19·5 million at 1984-85 prices. This was 10·3 per cent. of their total gross capital expenditure on housing in that year. In 1984-85 the equivalent figures were £85·3 million and 50·1 per cent.

Capital expenditure by local authorities on repair and renovation of their own dwellings was £27·3 million. In 1978-79 at 1984-85 prices, 14·4 per cent. of their total gross capital expenditure on housing. In 1984-85 the equivalent figures were £45·2 million and 26·6 per cent.

Mentally Handicapped Children

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will seek to ensure that a statutory responsibility is placed on local social services departments to ensure that mentally handicapped young people are found homes in the community rather than in long-stay institutions, whether these are in the public or private sector.

Mr. Mark Robinson: There is a need for a range of provision for mentally handicapped young people in the community and county council social services departments, in close co-operation with district health authorities, district councils, voluntary organisations, parents and other representatives of mentally handicapped people are currently developing such provisions through the medium comprehensive county plans to be funded under the all-Wales mental handicap strategy. I am satisfied that this is the most appropriate way forward and that new statutory powers are unnecessary.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales what applications he has received for funds, and for what purposes, under the All Wales Strategy for Mentally Handicapped Adults and Children from (a) Mudiad Ysgolion Meithrin and (b) the Pre-School Playgroups Association; what his reponse has been to these applications; and if he will make a statement elaborating on his decisions.

Mr. Mark Robinson: Mudiad Ysgolion Meithrin submitted two unsuccessful applications in respect of the appointment of development and liaison officers to assess needs. The Pre-School Playgroups association submitted two successful applications for a playgroup referral scheme in Clwyd and a special liaison officer to co-ordinate activities in counties. Funding of projects under the strategy is approved largely in accordance with comprehensive county plans co-ordinated by social services departments. Voluntary organisations are encouraged to join local planning teams. In a few cases, including the PPA referral scheme, funding under the strategy was provided directly by the Department through a programme to launch the strategy in its first year. Central funding has also applied in cases where there has been an all-Wales element in the proposals. Each application is considered on its merits and we reached the view that, unlike the PPA projects, the MYM proposals were not based on proven groundwork previously undertaken in the counties.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if separate figures are yet available for the numbers of children in long-stay mental handicap hospitals in each district health authority and in each regional health authority in Wales; and for each authority, what are the numbers living in units of (a) 25 or more beds, and (b) under 25 beds.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The following table shows, for each district health authority, the numbers of persons aged under 16 years who were resident in mental handicap hospitals and units with fewer than 25 beds on 5 April 1985, the latest date for which information is available. There were no persons aged under 16 years resident in mental handicap hospitals and units with 25 or more beds.

Welsh Language

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will renew for a further three years the grant to maintain the current project for the preparation of books, teaching materials and resources for Welsh language secondary schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Proposals are being considered but no decision has yet been taken about commissioning further work in preparing Welsh medium materials for schools.

Commission for Racial Equality

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales whether the Welsh Office have a permanent representative on the Welsh consultative committee of the Commission for Racial Equality.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer given to him on 24 October 1985 at column 200.

National Trust (Coastal Heritage)

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement about the National Trust coastal heritage project and his Department's involvement in it.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: I welcome the efforts of the National Trust to preserve our coastal heritage. The administration of its operation is a matter for the trust and our Department has no direct involvement.

Amenity Patients

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give for each health district the numbers of amenity beds, discharges and deaths, average daily occupied beds and percentage occupancy in 1983 and 1984 and the income from amenity patients.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The information is given in the following table:—

NHS (Services)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give for each year since 1979 the percentage of the expenditure on (a) medical and surgical equipment maintenance, (b) X-ray equipment maintenance, (c) laboratory equipment maintenance, (d) catering, (e) laundry, (f) cleaning, (g) engineering maintenance, (h) building maintenance, (i) grounds etc. maintenance, (j) vehicle maintenance and (k) computers, which has been paid to private contractors for services provided to the National Health Service in Wales.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The information requested is as follows:

Notes:

1. All figures are for current expenditure: capital is excluded.
2. Information in the table has been prepared on as consistent a basis as practicable but comparisons of percentages between services may in some cases be misleading as the basis of the total relevant expenditure figures for different services are not completely uniform.
3. There is no centrally available information on the expenditure on external contracts for computers prior to 1983-84.

* A fire in the central laundry in E. Dyfed led to some additional external contracts in 1983-84. This central laundry has since been repaired and re-opened.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give for each health district in 1984-85 the total expenditure on cleaning, the expenditure on services provided by private cleaning companies, the latter figure as a percentage of the former, and the difference between that percentage and the percentage in the previous year.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The information requested is as follows:

Domestic and cleaning services	Total expenditure 1984-85 £000	External contracts 1984-85 £000	External contracts as a percentage of total expenditure	Difference between percentage for 1984-85 and percentage for 1983-84

Private Practice

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give for each year since 1979 the number of ambulance service journeys in Wales carrying non-National Health Service patients and the total mileage involved.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The information is not available in terms of ambulance service journeys. The following table gives the numbers of non-NHS patient journeys and the total mileage involved.

Year	*Number of non-NHS patient journeys	Total mileage for non-NHS patient journeys
1979	3,094	34,024
1980	2,500	33,367
1981	1,337	25,576
1982	1,278	23,265
1983	947	17,522
1984	214	†

* One patient carried once in one direction is defined as one patient journey. A patient taken to a hospital and later in the same day taken home again counts as 2 patient journeys. If 2 or more patients are carried in one ambulance then they are defined as 2 or more patient journeys.
† Data no longer collected.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the private hospitals and nursing homes in Wales which treat National Health Service patients under contractual arrangements with health authorities.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The information is not available in the form requested. However, the private hospitals and nursing homes in Wales which treated NHS patients under contractual arrangements with Welsh district health authorities in 1984 are given below:

Maes Mynnan nursing home, Nr. Mold, Clwyd
Convent of Mercy, Colwyn Bay, Clwyd
Ty Gwyn residential home, Nr. Abergavenny, Gwent
Plymouth nursing home, Penarth, South Glamorgan
Ty Gwyn nursing home, Penarth, South Glamorgan
New Ravensworth, Neath, West Glamorgan

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give for each year since 1979 for each health authority and for Wales as a whole the number of deaths and discharges among, and the number of beds occupied on a given date by, patients receiving treatment under contractual arrangements with institutions outside the National Health Service, breaking the figures down by category of patient treated.

* Including all medical and dental consultants in the hospital and community service. Consultants who work for more than one authority are included only in the figures for the authority in which the majority of their sessions are worked.
† Pembrokeshire figures are included with Dyfed prior to 1982.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give, for each year since 1979 and for each health authority, the income from (a) private resident patients and (b) private non-resident patients.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The information requested is as follows:—

(a) Income from private resident patients

	1979-80 £000s	1980-81 £000s	1981-82 £000s	1982-83 £000s	1983-84 £000s	1984-85 £000s

Notes:

1. The NHS auditor for Wales was directed, in 1984, to conduct an all-Wales review of the management of private medical practice arising from concern regarding the management of private medical practice at Prince Charles hospital, Merthyr Tydfil (and at Good Hope hospital, Sutton Coldfield).

2. The 1985 auditors reports have not yet been circulated to health authorities.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give, for each health authority and for Wales as a whole, the expenditure on contractual arrangements for patient care in each year since 1979.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The information requested is as follows:

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many (a) health visitors, (b) community nurses, and (c) physiotherapists have been employed in each Welsh health authority for each of the years 1979 to 1985, inclusive.

Mr. Mark Robinson: Information* for 1979-84 is given below; corresponding figures for 1985 are not yet available.

Year	Health visitors	Community nurses†	Physiotherapists
1979	517	1,882	354

Private Hospital Developments

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals for private hospital developments have been notified to or authorised by him under the Health Services Act 1976 as amended by the Health Service Act 1980 since 1 May.

Mr. Mark Robinson: Since 1 May 1985 we have received the following notification:—

Clwyd county council—30 beds

There have been no requests for authorisation of controlled private hospital works.

Welsh Language

Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will establish a unit within his Department with specific responsibility for all matters relating to the Welsh language; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: At ministerial level I assist my right hon. Friend in Welsh language matters. At official level a co-ordinating responsibility is exercised by the Welsh Office education department. I have no plans for changing these arrangements.

Retirement Homes (Staff)

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales what proportion of people working in retirement homes in Wales are qualified nursing staff; and what was the proportion in 1979.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The information requested is not available.

Community Nurses

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many community nurses there are per 1,000 people aged 75 years and over; and how many proportionately there have been in each year from 1979 to 1984.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The information is given in the following table:—

Year	Community nurses per 1,000 population aged 75 years and over*
1979	14·7
1980	15·1
1981	14·9
1982	15·1
1983	14·2
1984	14·6

* Whole-time equivalents at 30 September.

Sheltered Accommodation

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales what has been the ratio of places available in sheltered accommodation in Wales per 1,000 people aged 65 years and over, for each year from 1979 to 1985.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The number of places available for the elderly in local authority and housing association sheltered accommodation, per 1,000 persons aged 65 and over in Wales is estimated as follows for the years 1983-85.

Number of places per 1,000 over 65

Year	Number
1983	34·9
1984	36·8
1985	38·6

Similar information is not available for the private sector or for years prior to 1983.

Home Helps

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is the number of whole-time equivalent home helps in each Welsh county; and, in those counties where there is a shortfall under the recommended level of provision, if he will publish the actual number of home helps estimated to be required to offset the shortfall.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The numbers of whole-time equivalent home helps in each Welsh county at 30 September 1984, are given in the table below:

Number of home helps (whole-time equivalent) at 30 September 1984

Local authority	Number
Clwyd	348·0
Dyfed	335·0
Gwent	623·3
Gwynedd	270·0
Mid Glamorgan	849·0
Powys	113·8
South Glamorgan	421·0
West Glamorgan	503·2

Assessments of need and decisions on levels of service to be provided are both matters for determination locally.

Health Visitors

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many visits were carried out by health visitors in Wales in each year from 1978 to 1984, inclusive, to people aged 65 years and over.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The information is given in the following table:

Number of visits carried out by health visitors in Wales to people aged 65 years and over

Year	Number
1978	44,455
1979	43,174
1980	42,315
1981	38,726
1982	37,886
1983	32,725
1984	32,072

Surgeons

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the average number of hours per week worked by a surgeon employed by the National Health Service in the fields of ear nose and throat, gynaecology, and general surgery, respectively.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The information for Wales is as follows—

*Average hours per week worked by consultant surgeon

Specialty	Hours
Ear, nose and throat	36·1
Gynaecology and obstetrics†	34·4
General surgery	35·1

* Based on contract hours at 30 September 1984.
† Gynaecology cannot be identified separately from obstetrics.

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the average work load, on a weekly basis, of surgeons now employed by the National Health Service in the specialties of ear nose and throat, gynaecology, and general surgery; and how many of these are day cases.

Mr. Mark Robinson: There is no single meaaure of surgeons' work load. The care of in-patients, out-patients and day cases each contributes to surgeons' activity. The latest available information for Wales for each of these is as follows:—

*Average Weekly Number Per Consultant Surgeon

	In-patient Cases ‡	Day case attendances	Out-patient attendances
Ear, nose and throat	16·5	1·4	111·8
Gynaecology and obstetrics†	40·4	1·6	147·2
General Surgery	24·8	4·2	72·2

* Based on cases for year ending December 1984 and consultants employed at 30 September 1984.
† Gynaecology cannot be identified separately from obstetrics.
‡ Discharges and deaths.

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Wales if there are any plans to employ more surgeons in the specialties of ear nose and throat, gynaecology, and general surgery within the National Health Service, and specifically in the Mid Glamorgan health authority.

Mr. Mark Robinson: There are no manpower restrictions on the appointment of more consultants in these specialties. District health authorities in Wales already have approval for three new posts in general surgery, two in ear, nose and throat, and four in obstetrics and gynaecology. In Mid Glamorgan, the appointment of an obtetrician and gynaecologist has recently been made, and an advertisement placed for a general surgeon.

Mid Glamorgan Health Authority

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any plans to seek to reduce the waiting lists for surgery in the fields of ear nose and throat, gynaecology, and general surgery, in the Mid Glamorgan health district; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The day-to-day management of the Health Service is primarily the responsibility of the district health authority. Nevertheless I am concerned to reduce waiting times, which are affected by a number of factors, and the Department is pursuing this matter with the NHS in Wales.

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the number of surgeons employed in the specialities of ear nose and throat, gynaecology, and general surgery, respectively, in the Mid Glamorgan health authority.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The information is as follows:

Mid Glamorgan Health Authority

Specialty	Consultant surgeons* Number	Whole-time equivalents
Ear, nose and throat	4	3·91
Gynaecology and obstetrics†	9	8·55
General surgery	10	8·73

* At 30 September 1984.
† Gynaecology cannot be identified separately from obstetrics.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Privatisation

Mr. Knox asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the receipts to the Treasury from privatisation have been in each financial year since 1979-80; and what he anticipates the receipts will be in each of the next five financial years, in cash terms and at constant prices.

Mr. Moore: Proceeds treated as special sales of assets, including the planning figures for 1985-86 and subsequent years, are set out in cash terms:

(£ million)

1979-80	1980-81	1981-82	1982-83	1983-84
370	405	494	488	1,142

(£ million)

1984-85	1985-86	1986-87	1987-88	1988-89
2,091	2,500	4,750	4,750	4,750

No planning figure has been decided for years after 1988-89. Using the assumptions for the GDP deflator given in footnote 2 to table 2.1 of the Autumn Statement, the planning figures for special sales of assets expressed in 1984-85 price levels are as follows:

(£ million)

1985-86	1986-87	1987-88	1988-89
2,381	4,329	4,183	4,061

Bank of England

Mr. Cohen asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) in what circumstances the Bank of England comments on its financial relationships with individual banking institutions; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will make it his policy to answer questions on commitments or guarantees of, or relating to, public money by the Bank of England in support of financial institutions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: It is for the Bank of England to determine its policy on answering questions concerning its relationships with financial institutions where these relationships rely on the bank's own resources. The bank is constrained by considerations of customer confidentiality and by the confidentiality requirements of the Banking Act 1979.

Written Answers ("Official Report")

Mr. Pawsey asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy that statistical information on public expenditure should be presented in written answers published in the Official Report in diagrammatic form, including graphs, bar graphs and pie charts in the same way as they are published in the public expenditure White Paper.

Mr. Brooke: The form of reporting in Hansard is ultimately for the House to decide but, on grounds of cost and risk of delay to publication, I would not at present want to propose publishing written answers in diagrammatic form.

Johnson Matthey Bankers

Mr. Sedgemore asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he knew of allegations concerning fraud in relation to Johnson Matthey Bankers as regards members of the Pahoomal family when he made his statement to the House on Johnson Matthey Bankers on 20 June.

Mr. Ian Stewart: No.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Departmental Files

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what arrangements operate for the logging of those who have access to (a) computer and (b) manual files kept by his Department on individuals; and if he will describe the procedures in operation for both categories.

Mr. Tom King: There are specific guidelines on security of automatically processed data in Government Departments. These are contained in "Protection of Information in Computer Systems" and "Central Government Code of Practice No 27" issued by the central computer and telecommunications agency and these guidelines have been accepted by Northern Ireland Departments.

Manual files are retained in central and divisional registries within Departments. When a person who is authorised to do so examines or withdraws such a file his or her name is recorded in the appropriate registry index and on the file cover.

Tendering Exercises

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give for each tendering exercise for hospital ancillary services of which his Department is aware (a) the health and social service board concerned, (b) the hospital concerned, (c) the service concerned (laundry, catering or cleaning), (d) the successful tenderers and (e) the saving achieved over the cost in the previous year.

Mr. Needham: The health boards complement some in-house cleaning and laundry services by private contracting but the information requested could only be obtained at disproportionate cost. The boards are now examining the feasibility of full services being provided commercially.

Health and Social Services Boards

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give, for each year since 1970 and for each health and social services board, the number of attendances by (a) private outpatients, (b) private day cases and (c) private regular day cases.

Mr. Needham: This information could be obtained only at a disproportionate cost.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give, for each health and social services board in 1984-85, the total expenditure on hospital catering, the total expenditure on services provided to hospitals by private catering companies, the latter figure as a percentage of the former and the difference between that percentage and the percentage in the previous year.

Mr. Needham: The information is as follows:

Health and social services board	Total expenditure in 1984-85 on hospital catering	Expenditure in 1984-85 on services provided by private catering companies		Difference between 1983-84 percentage and 1984-85 percentage

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give, for each health and social services board in 1984-85, the total expenditure on hospital laundry, the total expenditure on services provided to hospitals by private laundry companies, the latter figure as a percentage of the former and the difference between that percentage and the percentage in the previous year.

Mr. Needham: The information is as follows:

Health and social services board	Total expenditure in 1984-85 on hospital laundry	Expenditure in 1984-85 on services provided by private laundry companies		Difference between 1983-84 percentage and 1984-85 percentage

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give, for each health and social services board in 1984-85, the total expenditure on hospital cleaning, the total expenditure on services provided to hospitals by private cleaning companies, the latter figure as a percentage of the former and the difference between that percentage and the percentage in the previous year.

Mr. Needham: The information is as follows:

Health and social services board	Total expenditure in 1984-85 on hospital cleaning	Expenditure in 1984-85 on services provided by private cleaning companies		Diference between 1983-84 percentage and 1984-85 percentage

NHS (Private Contractors)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give, for each year since 1979, the percentage of the expenditure on (a) medical and surgical equipment maintenance, (b) X-ray equipment maintenance, (c) laboratory equipment maintenance, (d) catering, (e) laundry, (f) cleaning, (g) engineering maintenance, (h) building maintenance, (i) grounds, and so on, maintenance, (j) vehicle maintenance and (k) computers, which has been paid to private contractors for services provided to the National Health Service in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: The final accounts of health and social services boards do not currently distinguish expenditure on services provided by private contractors and the information requested could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Private Hospitals and Nursing Homes

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the private hospitals and nursing homes in Northern Ireland which treat National Health Service patients under contractual arrangements.

Mr. Needham: The information requested is as follows:

Alexian Brothers house, Warrenpoint.
Belfast charitable society, Clifton house.
Marie Curie foundation, Beaconfield.
St. John of God, Newry.
Ulster Volunteer Force hospital.

Ambulance Service Journeys

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give, for each year since 1979, the number of ambulance service journeys in Northern Ireland carrying non-National Health Service patients and the total mileage involved.

Mr. Needham: This information could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Patient Care (Expenditure)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give, for each health and social services board and for Northern Ireland as a whole, the expenditure on contractual arrangements for patient care in each year since 1979.

Mr. Needham: The information requested is as follows:

Expenditure on contractual arrangements for patient care

Financial year	Northern board £	Southern board £	Eastern board £	Western board £	Northern Ireland Total £
1979-80	2,889	91,236	844,127	3,817	942,069

Private Patients

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list, for each year since 1979, the health and social services boards for which statutory auditors have issued reports of poor control over private patient income.

Mr. Needham: None.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give, for each health and social services board for 1984 (a) the total number of private inpatients who may be accommodated, (b) the average daily occupancy of those beds by private patients and (c) the average occupancy rate percentage; and if he will give the 1983 figures for comparison.

Mr. Needham: The details are as follows:

Private In-patient Provision

	Total number of patients who may be accommodated*	Average daily number of paying patients occupying those beds	Average occupancy rate per cent.
Eastern health and social services board
1984	90	16·7	18·5

Patient Statistics

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give, for each year since 1979, for each health and social services board and for Northern Ireland as a whole, the number of deaths and discharges among, and the number of beds occupied on a given date by, patients receiving treatment under contractual arrangements with institutions outside the National Health Service, breaking the figures down by category of patient treated.

Mr. Needham: This information could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

NHS Consultants

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give, for each year since 1970 and for each health and social services board, the total number of National Health Service consultants holding (a) full-time, (b) maximum part-time, (c) other part-time and (d) honorary contracts.

Mr. Needham: The information is given in the attached tables. It should be noted that:

(i) it is not possible to give an accurate breakdown between maximum and other part-time consultants;

(ii) only total figures for Northern Ireland as a whole are available for the years prior to the creation of the health and social services boards;

(iii) in Great Britain clinical teaching staff hold honorary Health Service appointments, in Nothern Ireland they are appointed jointly by the University and the health and social services board. The numbers of joint appointments are shown in the tables;

(iv) consultants whose sessions are split between different boards are shown under the one with which their major involvement lies;

(v) dental consultants and community physicians are included.

Amenity Beds

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give, for each health and social services board (a) the number of amenity beds, (b) the number of deaths and discharges from amenity beds, (c) the number of amenity beds occupied on average, (d) the percentage occupancy rate and (e) the income from amenity patients in 1983 and 1984.

Mr. Needham: Beds are not specifically designated for amenity purposes and information in the form requested could only be obtained at disproportionate cost. However the average daily number of amenity patients in 1984 was:

	Number
Eastern board	8·4
Northern board	7·3
Southern board	0·9
Western board	1·0

Income from amenity patients in the 1983-84 and 1984-85 financial years was:

European Agriculture Guidance and Guarantee Fund

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give an estimate of the reduction in estimated payment made in the current year by his Department and, where they apply, the consequent savings to the European agriculture guidance and guarantee fund resulting from farmers' inability because of this summer's weather to carry out planned improvement work under each of the following schemes: (a) agriculture and horticulture development scheme, (b) agriculture and horticulture grant scheme, (c) Northern Ireland agriculture development programme and (d) grassland scheme; and if he will detail any other estimated savings being made by his Department or the European agriculture guidance and guarantee fund as a result of the weather.

Dr. Boyson: There is no information available on which to base reliable estimates.

Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Council

Mr. McCusker asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland where he expects to acquire premises for the secretariat of the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Council; and how much he expects to spend on (a) acquisition, (b) refurbishment and (c) providing the level of security which will be necessary to protect those working in or with the secretariat.

Mr. Tom King: I shall reply to the hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Health Bodies (Funding)

Mr. Pendry asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list all statutory health bodies indicating the funding available from his Department for each body for each of the past five years.

Mr. Hayhoe: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Hospital Statistics

Mr. Pendry asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the ratio of (a) hospital beds and (b) qualified nurses per head of population and per patient for each of the past 10 years.

Mr. Hayhoe: The ratios of hospital beds to population and of staff to population are given in the table. The relationship between available beds and patients occupying beds is normally expressed as the percentage of available beds occupied and this is also given in the table. Figures for the numbers of qualified nurses working in hospitals, and for occupied beds are shown in the table. Available overall manpower statistics identify staff working in hospitals at a particular point in time, but do not differentiate between types of activities within the hospital. Crude ratios of staff to the occupation of hospital beds not taking into account varying factors such as the age of patients and the type or complexity of treatment given are not therefore meaningful.

Kidney Transplants

Sir Eldon Griffiths asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what evidence he has of kidneys being purchased from India for use in transplant operations in Britain; and what steps he is taking to ensure that all donated kidneys used within the National Health Service have been procured without pressure on the donors.

Mr. Whitney: We have no evidence that kidneys have been purchased from India, although there have been allegations that private patients from the Indian subcontinent given transplants in this country have paid donors from their own areas to accompany them and provide a kidney. Details of these allegations have been made available to the General Medical Council, which has issued interim advice to doctors that "It is unethical and improper for a registered medical practitioner, wittingly or unwittingly, to encourage or take part in any way in the development of such trafficking in the sale of human organs; and that, accordingly, no surgeon should undertake the transplantation of a non-regenerative organ from a living donor without first making due inquiry to establish beyond reasonable doubt that the donor's consent has not been given as a result of any form of undue influence".

We have already condemned the abhorrent practice of selling organs for transplantation. We shall be considering the need for any further Government action when full advice has been issued by the council.

Fewer than 10 per cent. of kidneys transplanted into National Health Service patients come from live donors and there is no evidence that such donors have ever been subject to pressure.

Hypothermia

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list, for the United Kingdom and for England and Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland, separately, the number of deaths from hypothermia for each of the last 10 years for which figures are available; and if he will state how many of each annual total were deaths of people aged (a) 65 years and over and (b) 80 years and over.

Mr. Whitney: The table shows at (a) the numbers of deaths in the United Kingdom and its constituent parts where hypothermia was assigned as the underlying cause of death*. For England and Wales and for Scotland, but not for Northern Ireland, there are also statistics on the cases where hypothermia was mentioned on the death certificates, whether it was assigned as the underlying cause or not. The available figures are given at (b). A change in the international classification of diseases in 1979 means that the figures for 1975-78 for underlying cause are not comparable with those of later years. This change is not thought to have affected the statistics for mentions of hypothermia.

Hypothermia deaths: (a) as underlying cause of death and (b) with mention of hypothermia on death certificate United Kingdom, England and Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland, all ages, aged 65 years and over and aged 80 years and over, 1975-1985.

Board and Lodging

Mr. Irving asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what action he intends to take regarding the board and lodgings regulations in the light of the recent supplementary benefit appeal tribunal decision on financial limits.

Mr. Newton: I assume my hon. Friend is referring to the decision of the Acton social security appeal tribunal against which the Chief Adjudication Officer has appealed to the commissioner. I understand that the Chief Social Security Commissioner has requested that further submissions be made about the point of law involved after the hearing of the Appeal Court in the case of R v. Secretary of State for Social Services ex parte Cotton, which is to be heard on 25 and 26 November. Meanwhile, my right hon. Friend has laid fresh regulations before the House, as he announced on 11 November at column 322. These have now been approved by both Houses and come into operation today.

AIDS

Mr. Arnold asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has, broken down by area health authority, about the extent of the acquired immune deficiency syndrome in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Hayhoe: Up until 31 October of this year 241 cases had been reported to the communicable diseases surveillance centre. These may be broken down into geographical areas as follows:

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will give for each year since 1970 and for each region the number of attendances by (a) private out-patients, (b) private day cases and (c) private regular day patients;

(2) if he will give, for each special health authority, district health authority, regional health authority and for England as a whole (a) the number of authorised amenity beds on 31 December 1984, (b) the average daily number of beds occupied by amenity patients, (c) the discharges and deaths of amenity patients and (d) the income from amenity patients; and if he will give the 1983 figures for comparison;

(3) if he will explain the classification private regular day cases in Form SBH 211;

(4) if he will give, for each special health authority, district health authority, regional health authority and for England as a whole, the number of attendances during 1984 by (a) private out-patients, (b) private day cases and (c) private regular day patients; and if he will also give the 1983 figures for comparison;

(5) if he will give, for each special health authority, district health authority, regional health authority and for England as a whole (a) the number of authorised pay beds at 31 December 1984, (b) the average daily number of beds occupied by private patients during 1984 and (c) the number of discharges and deaths of private patients during 1984; and if he will give the 1983 figures for comparison;

(6) if he will list the private hospitals and nursing homes which treat National Health Service patients under contractual arrangements with health authorities.

Mr. Hayhoe: I shall let the hon. member have replies as soon as possible.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list those health authorities which have applied for limited authorisations for out-patient private practice to be replaced by general authorisations stating which applications were granted and which refused.

Mr. Hayhoe: The information requested is not readily available in the form requested, but 191 district and special health authorities now have general authorisations for private out-patients. All requests for such authorisations received since March 1982 have been granted.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give for each year since 1979 and for each region, the total number of authorised pay beds, the total number of deaths and discharges of private patients occupying those beds and the average daily occupation of those beds by private patients.

Mr. Hayhoe: The information requested is given in the tables.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give for 1984, for each region and for England as a whole, the number of deaths and discharges a month and the number of beds occupied on a given date by patients receiving treatment under contractual arrangements with institutions outside the National Health Service; and if he will break down these figures in the categories of (a) medical, (b) surgical, (c) pre-convalescent and post-operative, (d) convalescent, (e) geriatric, (f) disease of the chest, (g) maternity, (h) mental illness, (i) mental handicap, (j) rehabilitation, (k) terminal care and (l) others; and if he will give the 1983 figures for comparison.

Mr. Hayhoe: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give, for each year since 1979, the number of (a) in-patient discharges and deaths and (b) new out-patients treated among patients receiving acute treatment under contractual arrangements with institutions outside the National Health Service in England.

Mr. Hayhoe: The information requested is given in the table.

Patients receiving acute treatment under contractual arrangements with institutions outside the National Health Service—England*

Year	In-patient deaths and discharges	New out-patients treated
1979	21,976	40,202
1980	21,011	12,435
1981	21,463	12,229
1982	22,150	14,785
1983	22,360	13,327
1984†	24,945	14,296

* Acute is defined as all specialties except geriatrics, mental handicap, mental illness and maternity.
† Provisional.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has issued any guidelines to health authorities as to the inclusion in consultants' contracts of any restriction on their participation in the medical committees of private hospitals or clinics; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: No.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any evidence of shortages of specialist staff in National Health Service hospitals arising from the alleged actions of private hospitals or clinics in attracting staff away from the National Health Service by offers of improved salaries or conditions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: No.

NHS (Services)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will give, for each district in 1984-85, the total expenditure on cleaning, the expenditure on services provided by private cleaning companies, the latter figure as a percentage of the former, and the difference between that percentage and the percentage in the previous year;

(2) if he will give for each district in 1984-85 the total expenditure on catering, the expenditure on services provided by private catering companies, the latter figure as a percentage of the former, and the difference between that percentage and the percentage in the previous year;

(3) if he will give for 1984-85 for each region the figures for payments to outside contractors for support services and for contractual arrangements for patient care indicating the services provided; if he will also give each figure as a percentage of the total expenditure on the relevant service in each region; and if he will also give the 1983-84 figures for comparison.

Mr. Hayhoe: I shall let the hon. Member have replies as soon as possible.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give for each year since 1979 the percentage of the expenditure on (a) laundry, (b) domestic-cleaning services and (c) catering which has been paid to private contractors in the National Health Service.

Mr. Hayhoe: Following is the information requested, derived from the annual accounts of regional and district health authorities in England together with those of the special health authorities for the London postgraduate teaching hospitals.

Percentages of the relevant current expenditure paid to private contractors

	Laundry	Domestic-cleaning services	Catering
1979-80	14·1	2·4	0·2
1980-81	12·0	2·5	0·3
1981-82	11·7	2·1	0·2
1982-83	11·5	2·0	0·2
1983-84	9·7	2·0	0·2
*1984-85	11·0	2·2	0·5

* Provisional figures.
Note:
The figures are not strictly comparable over the whole period as value added tax on contracted out services became reclaimable by health authorities on 1 September 1983.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give for each district in 1984-85 the total expenditure on laundry, the expenditure on services provided by private laundry companies, the latter figure as a percentage of the former and the difference between that percentage and the percentage in the previous year.

Mr. Hayhoe: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report details of the progress made by district health authorities in England in putting their services out to tender since 31 March in the manner of the answer to the hon. Member for Harborough (Sir J. Farr) on 12 June, Official Report, columns 489-493.

Mr. Hayhoe: The position as at 30 September is shown in the tables. We are aware of 107 contracts which have been let to private contractors and these will realise an estimated £15·1 million in annual savings. Two hundred and fifty-eight tenders have been secured by in-house organisations and these will produce estimated annual savings of £13·9 million.

Ambulance Service

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give for 1983 and 1984 the number of ambulance service journeys carrying non-National Health Service patients and the total mileage involved.

Mr. Whitney: Ambulance services in England provided 141,000 non-National Health Service patient journeys in 1983 and 127,000 in 1984. In 1983 the corresponding mileage was 1,157,000. Central collection of information on the ambulance services' mileage was discontinued in 1984. A "patient journey" is the carriage of one patient in one direction. "Non-NHS patients" are all those in respect of whose transport a charge is made. They include persons carried on behalf of local authorities and other organisations as well as those private patients not entitled to free transport.

Private Hospitals

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what proposals for private hospital developments have been notified to him or authorised by him under the Health Services Act 1976 as amended by the Health Services Act 1980 since 21 January.

Mr. Hayhoe: Since 21 January 1985, 33 notifications have been received as follows. No applications for authorisation have been made.

Nurses (Pay)

Mr. White asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many nurses earn less than £101 per week; and what percentage this is of total nurses.

Mr. Hayhoe: I regret this information is not held centrally. However it is estimated from earnings data from 10 regional health authorities, that in the period April-September 1984, 30 per cent. of full-time nursing staff, virtually all either learners or unqualified nursing auxiliaries, earned on average less than £101 per week.

Junior Doctors (Training)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether there are any plans for co-operation between the Royal Free hospital and the Charter medical clinic concerning training rotas for junior doctors; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: I know of no such plans but the hon. Member may wish to approach the district health authority direct.

Food Hazard Warnings

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations his Department has received regarding dissemination of information to local authorities about the food hazard warning system and related matters; if he will take steps to improve the flow of such information; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: Representations are received from time to time, mainly about the speed and means of communicating food hazard warnings to Local Authorities. As to improving the system, I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Denton and Reddish (Mr. Bennett) on 29 October at column 447.

Mentally-handicapped Young Persons

Mr. Hannam asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if the figures are yet available for each district health authority and for each regional health authority of the number of young people between the ages of 16 and 19 years living in long-stay mental handicap hospitals; and, for each authority, what is the number living in (a) units of 25 or more beds, and (b) units of under 25 beds at 31 December 1984;

(2) what is the number of children on short-term placements in long-stay mental handicap hospitals for each district health authority and each regional health authority as at 31 December 1984; and for each authority, what is the number of units of: (a) 25 or more beds, and (b) under 25 beds;

(3) what were the numbers of children in long-stay mental handicap hospitals at 31 December 1984 for each district health authority and each regional health authority; and, for each authority, what was the number living in units of (a) 25 or more beds and (b) under 25 beds.

Mr. Whitney: Information is not collected centrally in precisely the form requested. I shall let my hon. Friend have the available information as soon as possible.

Legionnaire's Disease

Mr. McTaggart asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list in the Official Report current and past research projects since 1955 into the causes, means of transmission and treatment of Legionnaire's disease.

Mr. Hayhoe: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given, on 4 June, by my predecessor to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson) at columns 145-146.

Mr. McTaggart asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to receive the report of the public inquiry into the outbreak of Legionnaire's disease in Stafford; and when the report is likely to be published.

Mr. Hayhoe: I am advised that the committee of inquiry hopes to submit an interim report to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State by the end of January 1986. This will concern itself with the cause of the outbreak in Stafford and the adequacy of measures taken to investigate and deal with it. The committee also hopes to submit a final report by the end of March 1986 which will make recommendations on any action necessary to reduce the danger of future outbreaks. It is too early to say when the reports will be published.

Substandard Housing (Tyne and Wear)

Mr. Boyes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many properties have been reported as substandard in the Tyne and Wear area in accordance with DHSS circular S12/85.

Mr. Newton: During the six months ended 30 September 1985 four properties were reported to the local authority as substandard in the Tyne and Wear area in accordance with Department of Health and Social Security circular S12/85.

War Widows

Mr. Lofthouse asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to award the second pension to pre-31 March 1973 war widows to bring them in line with service widows after that date.

Mr. Major: No. Pensions under the war pensions scheme administered by the Department are payable on the same basis to all widows irrespective of the date of their husband's service. The pensions which are payable, in addition, under the occupational pension scheme for the Armed Forces to the widows of men who served since 31 March 1973 are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence.

Pregnavite Forte

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will now include Pregnavite Forte in the list of drugs available on prescription to pregnant mothers.

Mr. Hayhoe: All the ingredients of this preparation remain available on National Health Service prescription. In these circumstances, the Advisory Committee on National Health Service Drugs saw no need for the combination proprietary product. I understand that further representations have been made to the advisory committee and these will be considered at its next meeting in January.

Christmas Bonus

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what the 1985 Christmas bonus would be if it had been raised in line with (a) the rise in the retail price index and (b) the increase in average earnings.

Mr. Major: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Coventry, South-East (Mr. Nellist) on 21 October at column 54.

Liverpool

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received from the Catholic Social Services (Liverpool) concerning the current financial situation in the city; what reply he has sent; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has received representations from Catholic Social Services (Liverpool). In his reply he expressed concern for the many children and handicapped people who rely on it and other voluntary agencies in Liverpool and condemned the impact of the behaviour of the Liverpool city council on the partnership which should exist between such agencies and the local statutory services. He also referred to the meeting representatives of voluntary organisations in Liverpool had last week, with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment, at which they explained the effect on them of the city council's actions. We are watching the position closely.

Kidney Dialysis

Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether reciprocal arrangements exist within the EEC for kidney dialysis patients to obtain treatment in whatever country they visit.

Mr. Whitney: There are provisions under the European Community's social security arrangements for visitors who are covered by those arrangements and who need dialysis treatment, when visiting another member state to receive such treatment, through the host country's state health scheme, on the same terms as insured residents of that country.

Special procedures for advance booking of dialysis facilities have been agreed by the member states. Details of these procedures have been sent to all dialysis units in the United Kingdom, as well as to the British Kidney Patients Association and The National Federation of Kidney Patients Associations, together with a list compiled by the Commission, of units providing treatment in the member states. Visitors from the United Kingdom have to present form E111, except in Denmark and the Republic of Ireland.

Nurses (Leeds)

Mr. O'Brien asked the Secreary of State for Social Services what increase in the number of nurses in the Leeds Eastern health authority is needed to ensure that no operations are cancelled or services reduced because of shortage of nurses.

Mr. Hayhoe: Nurse staffing levels are a matter for local management. The hon. Member may wish to seek such information from the health authority chairman.

Human Tissue

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will place in the Library all documents and correspondence relating to the investigation in 1983 by officials of his Department into an alleged trade in dead human foetal material.

Mr. Hayhoe [pursuant to his reply, 11 November 1985, c. 94]: In accordance with normal practice I am seeking the agreement of the individuals concerned to the placing of the correspondence in the Library. I shall let the hon. Member have a further reply as soon as possible.

National Insurance Contributions

Mr. Yeo asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what assumptions were used by the Government Actuary in preparing the "Autumn Statement 1985" about the numbers of class 1 national insurance contributors in each of the earnings bands proposed for 1986-87, their aggregate earnings and about the proportion that are contracted out of the state earnings related pension scheme.

Mr. Major [pursuant to his reply, 18 November 1985, c. 80]: The information is as follows:

Earnings bands £	Number paying standard rate national insurance contributions in Great Britain (millions)	Aggregated earnings (£ billions)	Proportion contracted out of the state earnings related pension scheme (percentage)
38-60	1·4	3·5	5
60-95	2·0	8·3	17
95-140	3·9	23·6	44
140-285	8·6	86·2	67
Over 285	1·7	34·4	68

DEFENCE

Ship Refits

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Defence when he will publish the comparative cost of ships being refitted in Devonport and those being refitted in private yards.

Mr. Norman Lamont: It remains my intention to publish an indication of the comparison of costs between these ships. It is not possible at this stage to give a date.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is his estimate of the proportion of refitting work for naval vessels that can be classified as emergent work.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Emergent work varies considerably as between different refits. On average, emergent work can be expected to account for approximately 10-30 per cent. of a refit.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is his estimate of the amount of unprogrammed work in the naval refitting programme.

Mr. Norman Lamont: An allowance of some 6 to 7 per cent. is currently included in estimates for unprogrammed naval refit work.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is his estimate of the proportion of naval refitting work that is now carried out in the private sector.

Mr. Norman Lamont: During 1985-86 it is expected that about 22 per cent. of naval refitting, including work on Royal Fleet Auxiliary vessels, will have been carried out in the private sector.

Military Aircraft (Refuelling)

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Defence what arrangements were made for refuelling of United Kingdom military aircraft flying from Belize to Colombia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: The two Puma helicopters refuelled in Honduras, Nicaragua, Costa Rica and Panama (twice), in flying from Belize to Colombia. The Hercules flew direct. The Government are very grateful to all the countries concerned for the helpful response received to requests for diplomatic clearance for these flights and for assistance with refuelling the helicopters.

Service Officers (Pay)

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will set out the gross salaries and any additional allowances or deductions for second lieutenants, lieutenants and captains in the Army and the equivalent ranks in the Royal Air Force and Royal Navy for each year since 1979.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The gross daily rates of pay for these Army ranks are set out in the table. They apply also to equivalent ranks in the other Services. A wide range of allowances and various forms of additional pay (such as parachute pay and diving pay) are available to individuals in particular circumstances. Apart from normal deductions of income tax and earnings-related national insurance contributions, service personnel are expected to pay a charge for food and accommodation where this is provided at public expense. These charges are fixed on the recommendation of the Armed Forces Pay Review Body and details of current rates are given in its 14th Report (Cmnd. 9526).

Note: Slightly lower rates apply to female officers to reflect the lower rate of X-factor recommended for them by the Armed Forces Pay Review body.

Government Contracts

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish the figures for the appropriate rates of profit as recommended by the review board for Government contracts with special reference to non-competitive naval building and naval refitting work.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Non-competitive naval building and naval refitting work attract the same rates of profit as all other non-competitive work placed by my Department. Full details of these rates were set out by my right hon. Friend, the Member for Bosworth (Mr. Butler) on 16 May, at columns 207-8.

Royal Dockyards

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is his estimate of the value of the assets of (a) Rosyth dockyard and (b) Devonport dockyard.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Figures for the value of the fixed assets of Rosyth and Devonport dockyards were published in the 1984-85 Defence Appropriation Accounts, laid before Parliament on 23 October 1985.

Cyprus Secrets Trial

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether the seniority payments due to the seven acquitted defendants in the Cyprus Official Secrets Act trial are at the same level as they would have been had proceedings not been taken against them; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley [pursuant to his reply, 22 November 1985, c. 354]: Soldiers and airmen are not paid seniority payments. I assume that the hon. Member is referring to length of service increments. Only one of the service men concerned had a length of service increment entitlement and the level of that payment has been unaffected by the legal proceedings that have taken place.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Ethiopia (British Airlift)

Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the future of the British airlift in Ethiopia.

Mr. Raison: Since my announcement on 22 July that there was a need for the airlift to be extended until December, the outlook in Ethiopia has continued to improve. The UN co-ordinator estimates that by the end of the year sufficient trucking capacity should exist to distribute likely relief needs in 1986. Moreover, the main international airport at Addis Ababa — at which our detachment is based — will be closed to heavy aircraft for two months early in 1986 for runway maintenance. Prospects for the main harvest are also encouraging and most of the roads are now usable again after the rains. This picture was confirmed by the Ethiopian relief and rehabilitation commissioner, Major Dawit, when he called on me on 5 November. I have decided therefore that the British airlift, which has made such a magnificent contribution to relief operations in Ethiopia since November 1984, should be discontinued in the latter part of December.

In other ways, however, we shall provide continuing substantial relief and rehabilitation assistance to Ethiopia during 1986, as well as food aid. As part of this, I have now decided to offer £2 million for agricultural rehabilitation, including seeds and tools, and £1 million for water provision schemes in Wollo. We shall also of course be contributing our share of European Community food aid and rehabilitation schemes in Ethiopia.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Plastic Baton Rounds

Mr. Lyell asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he is satisfied with arrangements for making plastic baton rounds available to police forces; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: As the House was informed at the time, plastic baton rounds and CS gas for public order use were made available to police forces in Great Britain following the riots in 1981. In response to a question by the hon. Member for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn) on 19 November at columns 140-41 my hon. Friend the Minister of State listed those forces in England and Wales that hold such equipment.

It is right that such equipment should be available, for use only in the last resort, and subject to strict conditions. As part of their efforts to learn from the recent disorders, it is also right for chief officers of police to review their public order equipment in order to ensure that they can carry out their duty of maintaining order in their force areas.

If, in pursuit of that duty, a chief officer of police concludes that he does need plastic baton rounds, this is initially a matter for him and his police authority. But I should make it clear that where a chief officer concludes that he requires plastic baton rounds, and this is endorsed by the independent professional advice of Her Majesty's Inspector of Constabulary, I shall support him. In those circumstances, I regard it as essential that plastic baton rounds should be available to the force concerned.

My department is consulting the chief officers of police and the police authorities most immediately concerned to work out how such a requirement is best met.

Public Houses (Opening Hours)

Mr. Hill asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will seek to extend the hours of opening for public houses in England and Wales to a level comparable with opening hours in Scotland.

Mr. Mellor: We shall want to examine the full report of the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys' study of consumption of alcohol in Scotland, together with other relevant information, before deciding whether relaxations should be introduced in the permitted opening hours of licensed premises in England and Wales. We understand that the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys' report is to be published early next year.

Metropolitan Police

Mr. Knowles asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the Metropolitan police will be expected to provide mutual aid to other police forces facing riot and civil disorder before other forces are called upon to do so because of the greater amount of riot equipment available to the Metropolitan police.

Mr. Giles Shaw: This is a matter for chief officers of police under section 14(1) of the Police Act 1964.

Immigration

Mr. Stan Thorne asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether it is the normal practice for immigration officers interviewing British subjects married to visitors to the United Kingdom to ask what role hon. Members have played in giving advice to their constituents in immigration cases.

Mr. Waddington: No.

Mr. Stan Thorne asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information is collected by immigration officers about the advice given to their constituents by hon. Members in immigration cases; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: When a person sponsoring a visitor indicates that his Member has given him advice on the case that fact is routinely recorded by the immigration officer. Similarly, when a person is refused leave to enter, and a Member makes representations against that refusal, the points raised by the hon. Member will be recorded so that a response may be made. In addition, there may be occasions when correspondence between an hon. Member and a sponsor or passenger becomes available in the course of an examination. That information will also be collected if it is relevant to the immigration officer's decision.

Harmondsworth Detention Centre

Mr. Crowther asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average daily cost of keeping a person in detention at Harmondsworth detention centre.

Mr. Waddington: The latest available information is that the cost per day of detaining a person in the immigration service detention centre at Harmondsworth was estimated at £115 for the financial year 1984-85. Subject to certain exceptions, the cost of detention for passengers refused leave to enter the country falls to the relevant airline or other company.

Mr. Crowther asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many foreign and Commonwealth nationals intending to visit the United Kingdom are currently in detention at Harmondsworth detention centre.

Mr. Waddington: At noon on 22 November 16 foreign nationals and 27 Commonwealth citizens who had sought entry to the United Kingdom as visitors and who had either been refused entry or required to submit to further examination were detained at the Harmondsworth detention unit.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Cyprus Official Secrets Act Trial

Mr. Bermingham asked the Attorney-General for how long each of the seven acquitted defendants in the Cyprus Official Secrets Act trial were remanded in custody.

The Solicitor-General: The details set out hereafter relate to the periods after the defendants were charged by officers of the Metropolitan police. SAC Geoffrey Jones was in custody from 13 April 1984 until he was discharged on 28 October 1985. SAC Adam Lightowler was in custody from 13 April 1984 until he was discharged on 25 October 1985. SAC Wayne Kriehn was in custody from 13 April 1984 until 6 September 1984. Thereafter he was granted bail until 20 November 1984, when it was revoked. Thereafter he was in custody until he was discharged on 25 October 1985. SAC Christopher Payne was in custody from 13 April 1984 until 20 November 1984, when he was released on bail. SAC Gwynfor Owen was in custody from 13 April 1984 until 23 August 1984, when he was released on bail. Signalman Martin Tuffy was in custody from 13 April 1984 until 26 July 1984, when he was released on bail. Lance corporal Anthony Glass was in custody from 8 June 1984 until 26 July 1984, when he was released on bail.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Select Committees (Ethnic Community Reports)

Mr. Alton asked the Lord Privy Seal if there are any plans for Select Committee reports on ethnic communities to be published in the mother tongues of those communities.

Mr. Biffen: I am informed that following the publication of the report of the Home Affairs Committee on the Chinese community in Britain (HC No. 102 1984-85), the Hong Kong government London office prepared and distributed a summary of the report in Chinese at their own expense.

I am not aware of any plans to publish at public expense Select Committee reports on ethnic communities in languages other than English.

PRIME MINISTER

Scotland

Q14. Mr. Craigen asked the Prime Minister when she next intends to pay an official visit to Scotland.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

USA (President)

Q16. Mr. Latham asked the Prime Minister when she next expects to meet the President of the United States of America.

The Prime Minister: I met President Reagan last Thursday, 21 November, when he reported to the NATO Council on his meeting with Mr. Gorbachev. I have no immediate plans for a further meeting.

Scottish Teachers (Pay)

Q25. Mr. Allen Adams asked the Prime Minister what increases in absolute and percentage terms would be necessary to restore Scottish teachers' salaries to the position established following the Houghton committee in 1974.

The Prime Minister: The average salary paid to Scottish teachers on 1 April 1985, the date from which the next settlement should run, is around £800 (8 per cent.) less than the figure obtained by increasing the average salary following the 1974 Houghton award to allow for changes in the retail price index in the intervening period.

Elizabeth Keayes (Burglary)

Q27. Mr. Dalyell asked the Prime Minister for what reasons No. 10 Downing street asked for a news blackout in relation to the police investigation into the burglary at the home of Elizabeth Keayes in Battersea in November 1983; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given to him on my behalf by the Lord Privy Seal on Thursday 21 November at column 270.

Wales

Q36. Mr. Wigley asked the Prime Minister when she next proposes to make an official visit to Wales.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Urban Renewal

Q46. Mr. Freeson asked the Prime Minister what responsibilities she has given to the members of the Government with regard to integrating different Departments' action on urban renewal in inner city areas.

The Prime Minister: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment has responsibility for the inter-departmental urban programme which targets specific grant resources on urban areas to support a range of initiatives to stimulate enterprise, improve the environment and encourage self-help. My noble Friend the Secretary of State for Employment oversees the work of the five city action teams in the inner city partnership areas to improve the contribution of the programmes of his department and the Manpower Services Commission, Department of Trade and Industry and the Department of the Environment towards meeting the needs of those areas. Other Government Departments are also involved in the work of the city action teams.

Stonebridge

Q69. Mr. Pavitt asked the Prime Minister if she will pay an official visit to Stonebridge.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Bristol

Q88. Mr. Sayeed asked the Prime Minister when she next plans to pay an official visit to Bristol.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Engagements

Mr. Strang asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 26 November.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 26 November.

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Prime Minister if she will list her engagements for Tuesday 26 November.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in this House I shall be having further meetings later today. This evening I hope to have an audience of Her Majesty the Queen.

Falkland Islands (Government Support)

Mr. David Young asked the Prime Minister if she will give a detailed breakdown of expenditure in support of the Falkland Islands in the last year for which information is available; and if she will give the figures separately for (a) defence and (b) other areas of expenditure, indicating in each case the Departments responsible and the amounts of expenditure attributable to each.

The Prime Minister: Expenditure in support of the Falkland Islands in 1984-85 (the last full year for which information is available) was some £640 million. The total is made up as follows:

	£ million
(a) Ministry of Defence*
Residual campaign costs	241
Garrison costs (including works)	391
(b) Foreign and Commonwealth Office
War damage compensation	0·21
Diplomatic personnel	0·25
(c) Overseas Development Administration
Development aid	6·3
Rehabilitation aid	0·7

* Estimated outturn met from the addition to the defence budget for Falklands costs.

South Africa (Commonwealth Commission)

Mr. Beith asked the Prime Minister whether financial institutions were among those consulted concerning the nomination of a British representative for the Commonwealth Commission which is to visit South Africa.

The Prime Minister: No.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Countryside Commission

Mr. Dalyell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what response he has given to the Countryside Commission about its proposals to designate 46 sites where landowners should be paid to improve the environment; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Fenner: The list of 46 sites which the Countryside Commission has sent me represents only its preliminary view of the sites that might be considered for designation as environmentally sensitive. It is now considering with the Nature Conservancy Council to which of these sites we might give priority if the Agriculture Bill which is currently before Parliament becomes law.

Contaminated Wine

Mr. Gould asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he is satisfied with the steps taken by his Department to warn the public of the dangers of contaminated wine; and if he is satisfied that the action so far taken against vendors has provided effective protection to the public.

Mrs. Fenner: Yes. Both the trade and the public would seem to have taken notice of the advice issued by myself and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services. The wine trade has co-operated fully with us in this matter and I have had no reports of any proceedings being taken by local authorities against traders for offering contaminated wine for sale for human consumption.

Irradiated Foods

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if Her Majesty's Government have yet received the report of the advisory committee on irradiated and novel foods; and when he expects this report to be published;

(2) what advice has been given to ports and customs authorities regarding possible attempts at importation of irradiated foodstuffs into the United Kingdom;

(3) what cases of alleged irradiated foodstuffs have been detected by port authorities and by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise; and what action has been taken;

(4) if it is permitted to offer for sale imported foods which have been treated with ionising radiation; and what measures are taken to control such imports.

Mr. Whitney: I have been asked to reply.

I understand that the advisory committee's report on food irradiation will soon be presented to my right hon.

Friends the Secretary of State for Social Services and the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food. We expect to publish the report early in 1986.

In the United Kingdom, the importation and marketing of irradiated foods are at present prohibited by regulations, the enforcement of which is the responsibility of the port health and local authorities. No advice on enforcement has been issued by the Department and no information is held centrally about the activities of enforcement authorities.

WALES

Areas of Outstanding Natural Beauty

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Wales what are the criteria for establishing an area of outstanding natural beauty; what restrictions are imposed on development and caravan sites in such areas; what resources are available for their enforcement; and whether he plans to make any changes in the current criteria.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Section 87 of the National Parks and Access to the Countryside Act 1949 provides that the Countryside Commission may, by order subject to confirmation by the Secretary of State, designate as areas of outstanding natural beauty such areas as appear to the commission to be of such outstanding natural beauty that it is desirable that the provisions of an Act should apply to them. AONB designation does not of itself impose restrictions on development, but in determining planning applications the local planning authority would need to have regard to the provisions of structure and local plans and any other material considerations including AONB designation. Structure plans which include AONBs normally contain restrictive land use policies to protect such areas. In addition, the Town and Country Planning (National Parks, Areas of Outstanding Natural Beauty and Conservation Areas etc.) Special Development Order 1985 imposes restrictions in areas of outstanding natural beauty on certain permitted development rights. The resources devoted to planning control and enforcement are a matter for individual planning authorities. I have no plans to change current criteria.

Welsh Language

Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for Wales how responsibility for the Welsh Language is allocated within his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave him on Monday 25 November.

Plant Breeding Station (Aberystwyth)

Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any plans to take over the Welsh plant breeding station, Gogerddan, Aberystwyth; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: I have no plans to take over the Welsh plant breeding station. I do not consider that there would be any advantage in isolating agricultural research undertaken in Wales and I am convinced that the future of the station can best be secured within the framework of the Agricultural and Food Research Council.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

GCSE Examination

Mrs. Kellett-Bowman asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will consider postponing the introduction of the new general certificate of secondary education examination until such time as further resources may be available and students suitably prepared for it.

Sir Keith Joseph: No. This reform of the examination system has been long awaited, and its announcement last year was widely welcomed. The Government's expenditure plans for 1986-87 provide scope for authorities to redeploy their resources towards policies to which they wish to give priority, including the GCSE, provided that they contain costs and take advantage of opportunities for efficiency savings.

Maintained Schools (Parental Contributions)

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's policy towards parental financial contributions to the purchase of books and equipment in maintained schools in the light of the report of the National Confederation of Parent Teacher Associations of October 1985, a copy of which has been sent to him.

Mr. Dunn: I refer the hon. Member to my reply of 22 November to the hon. Member for Dulwich (Mr. Bowden) at column 342.

Anglo-Australian Telescope

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what action he has taken on Professor Don Matthewson's proposals for co-operation on the use of the Anglo-Australian telescope.

Mr. Walden: No proposals regarding the use of United Kingdom time on the Anglo-Australian telescope have been received from the Australian National University, in which Professor Don Mathewson holds a chair.

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proposals he has for financial reasons to curtail the access of British astronomers to the Anglo-Australian telescope.

Mr. Walden: None.

Ocean Drilling Programme

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on British participation in the ocean drilling programme.

Mr. Walden: I understand that the Natural Environment Research Council (NERC) sees United Kingdom participation in the ocean drilling programme (ODP) as an important aspect of the council's support for the environmental sciences. It will also provide information and experience valuable to wider United Kingdom interests, including industry. The annual subscription for the ODP is $2·5 million. NERC, in discussion with major British oil companies and the Departments of Energy, Environment and Trade and Industry, is attempting to find sufficient resources for full United Kingdom membership.

Undergraduates (Statistics)

Mr. Merchant asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has as to the numbers of persons aged 18 years who were admitted as full-time first year undergraduates at universities in England and Wales in 1979 and each of the following years whose homes were in (a) England and Wales, (b) Tyne and Wear, (c) Newcastle upon Tyne and (d) Surrey: (i) in total and (ii) as a percentage of all persons aged 18 years living in each of the respective areas.

Mr. Walden: The readily available information is based on the number of new award-holders at United Kingdom universities. It is not possible to distinguish those who are aged 18 from this source.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Inland Revenue Records

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how long the central repository for Inland Revenue records at Bradford has not been able to process requests to see documents; and how long this is likely to continue.

Mr. Moore: It has not been possible to obtain files and records from the Inland Revenue repository at Bradford for 12 months because of the presence of a dangerously high level of asbestos particles. This is likely to continue for another 11 months.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has made any assessment of the effects of imposing value added tax on building alterations for the purpose of helping disabled people; and if he has any plans for removing value added tax on these building alterations and on charities.

Mr. Lawson: When building alterations were brought into the tax last year I thought it right to relieve some building alterations to suit the needs of the disabled. These limited reliefs related to access and toilets and bathrooms and were widely welcomed. I know there is pressure to go much further, but the cost of extending these limited reliefs to cover all building alterations for the disabled would be prohibitive. Accordingly, I have no plans to allow such a wide relief, nor to remove VAT on expenditure by charities.

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total value added tax bill on charities in 1984; how much of this was attributable to the imposition of value added tax on building alterations; and how much in total was raised in value added tax from organisations of and for disabled people.

Mr. Lawson: Information about the amounts of value added tax borne by charities is not available from official records and could only be collected at disproportionate cost.

Systime plc

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has examined complaints into the alleged detention and threatening of staff at Systime plc during a visit by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise in July 1984; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Income Tax

Dr. McDonald asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the cost in the 1986-87 financial year of introducing a reduced rate band of 25p of income tax on (i) the first £750 of taxable income, (ii) the first £1,000 of taxable income and (iii) the first £1,500 of taxable income; and in each case, what would be the impact on the net income of a married man on half average earnings, three-quarters average earnings, average earnings, twice average earnings, five times average earnings and 10 times average earnings.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 22 November 1985, c. 333.]: The direct revenue costs are estimated to be about £850 million, £1,100 million, and £1,600 million, respectively, in a full year at 1986-87 levels of income, compared with the illustrative income tax regime resulting from 5½ per cent. indexation of 1985-86 allowances, thresholds and bands published in the autumn statement 1985. At each of the levels of gross income specified, the gain in net income from introduction of the reduced rate bands would be (i) 72p, (ii) 96p and (iii) £1·44 per week respectively. The estimates of Revenue cost assume that a separate lower rate band would also be available to a married couple against the wife's earned income; and that the thresholds for higher rates of tax would be unaffected by the introduction of the lower rate band.

TRANSPORT

A11 (Tuddenham Road)

Sir Eldon Griffiths asked the Secretary of State for Transport what assumptions were made in deciding on a 10-metres central reserve for the A11 dual carriageway at the junction with Tuddenham road as to the normal statutory maximum lengths of heavy goods vehicles with trailers, articulated vehicles and rigid lorries; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: The standard width of central reservation provided when a side road is linked to a dual carriageway is 10 metres. Exceptionally the width can be increased where high usage by long HGVs is expected. Such usage was not expected at the Tuddenham road junction and as indicated in the answer to my hon. Friend on 15 November, the Department will be discussing with Suffolk county council the possibility of measures to restrain the use of Tuddenham road by non-local heavy goods traffic.

Accident Statistics

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish the figures of those killed and injured in road traffic accidents involving alcohol during 1984.

Mrs. Chalker: Detailed figures are included in "Road Accidents in Great Britain 1984" pages 25 to 29 published today. A copy is being placed in the Library.

Pelican Crossings

Mr. Andrew Bowden asked the Secretary of State for Transport when the experiments into directional audible units and special push button units for pelican crossings will be completed; and when the units will be available for general use.

Mrs. Chalker: The experiments using both directional audible units and tactile push button units include an evaluation phase of the production equipment which should be completed by late 1986. Subject to successful evaluation the units should be available for general use during 1987.

Blisworth Bypass

Mr. Michael Morris asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is his latest estimate of the timing of Blisworth, Northamptonshire, bypass.

Mrs. Chalker: Allowing for the completion of statutory procedures and anticipated public inquiry, the A43 Blisworth bypass construction is programmed to start in 1988.

Portsmouth Driving Test Centre

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many people are to be recruited to the Portsmounth driving test centre.

Mrs. Chalker: Two examiners have been posted into the Portsmouth centre in September and November. This has brought the total strength to seven sufficient, we consider, to reduce the present waiting period and meet current demand.

SCOTLAND

Undergraduates

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many (a) mature and (b) other undergraduate students attending full-time courses at colleges and universities in Scotland have not yet received payment of their Scottish Education Department awards for the current year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: By mid-October approximately 64,000 applications for students' awards had been received by the Scottish Education Department, of which fewer than 30 are still awaiting final assessments. Since the middle of October more than 1,000 late applications have been received, the majority of which have now been passed for payment. Late applications continue to be received daily, but the Department has standing arrangements with educational establishments to identify students who may suffer hardship as a result of consequential delays. Separate information for mature and other undergraduate students is not available.

Police Establishment

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the actual and establishment level of police in Scotland; and how the figures compare with 1979.

Mr. John MacKay: The information is set out in the following table:

Police establishment and strength: Scotland

Year	Authorised establishment at 30 September	Actual strength at 30 September
1979	13,276	13,023
1985	13,465	13,273

The figures include officers who are employed at ports, airports and oil-related industrial sites and whose costs are not borne entirely by police authorities. Also included are officers on national training courses and those seconded to central service posts.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give actual and establishment level figures for police based in the Strathclyde police authority area from 1979 to date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: The information is set out in the following table:

Strathclyde police

Year	Authorised police establishment at 30 September	Actual strength at 30 September
1979	6,977	6,785
1980	6,955	6,936
1981	6,955	6,832
1982	6,954	6,811
1983	6,954	6,781
1984	6,954	6,785
1985	6,954	6,790

Manning levels in the force are determined by the police authority within the establishment figure authorised by my right hon. Friend.

Council Houses

Mr. Hirst asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for each Scottish housing authority the number of council houses which, at the latest convenient date, were empty and had been unlet for more than eight weeks; and if he will express that number in each case as a percentage of the total housing stock.

Mr. Ancram: This information in not collected centrally.

Paisley (Labour Statistics)

Mr. Allen Adams asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish unemployment figures for the Paisley area separately from those for greater Glasgow.

Mr. Allen Stewart: Unemployment figures for districts and parliamentary constituencies are published monthly in the Employment Gazette, available in the House of Commons Library.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Hospital Closures

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what implications the possible closure of Crawfordsburn hospital has for patients waiting for admission to geriatric medicine in the North Down district of the Eastern board;

(2) what implications the closure of Haypark hospital, Belfast, has for patients waiting for admission to geriatric medicine in the Belfast district of the Eastern board, north and west; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what implications the closure of Templemore and Haypark hospitals, and the possible closure of Crawfordsburn hospital, has for patients awaiting geriatric outpatient treatment in (a) the east and north Belfast, (b) the North Down and (c) the Bangor districts of the Eastern health and social services boards;

(4) what implications the closure of Templemore Avenue hospital has for patients waiting for admission to geriatric medicine in the east Belfast district of the Eastern board.

Mr. Needham: The Department of Health and Social Services is currently considering proposals made by the Eastern health and social services board for the rationalisation of hospital services. The proposals involve a substantial realignment of beds, but in so far as geriatric bed provision is concerned the proposed closures of Haypark and Templemore Avenue hospitals would be offset by an equivalent expansion in the number of geriatric beds in other hospitals. The Department has not received proposals for the closure of Crawfordsburn hospital.

Tourism

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will estimate the earnings from tourism in the Province in each of the years 1968 to 1984, inclusive.

Dr. Boyson: Following is the information:

£ million

	Earnings from staying visitors	Earnings from home holiday-makers	Earnings from day excursionists
1968	17.655	*	11.555
1969	14.545	*	10.700
1970	16.039	*	8.620
1971	12.836	*	7.780
1972	8.640	7.040	7.438

Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Council

Mr. McCusker asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland where he expects to acquire premises for the secretariat of the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Council; and how much he expects to spend on (a) acquisition, (b) refurbishment and (c) providing the level of security which will be necessary to protect those working in or with the secretariat.

Mr. Tom King [pursuant to his reply, 25 November 1985]: Consideration is being given to possible premises but no firm decisions can be taken until the two Governments have notified each other of their acceptance of the agreement.

ENVIRONMENT

Derelict Land

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the acreage of derelict land in (a) the London borough of Ealing and (b) the constituency of Ealing, North; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: The 1982 survey of derelict land in England, the latest information available, showed that at 1 April 1982 there were 190 acres of derelict land in the London borough of Ealing. The data in the survey are not broken down by parliamentary constituency.

Acid Rain

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what interim guidance for action on the effects of acid rain on stone he has received from Mr. Roy Butlin and the committee considering damage to medieval buildings.

Mrs. Rumbold None.

Systems-built Homes (Defects)

Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many systems-built homes have been found to be defective; how many have been demolished; and how many remain in an unsatisfactory condition, in Yorkshire and Humberside.

Sir George Young: According to the responses by local authorities to the Department's stock condition inquiry earlier this year, there are 80,572 local authority owned non-traditional dwellings in Yorkshire and Humberside. On the basis of responses from local authorities which were able to make estimates, approximately 67 per cent. required work of a structural nature at 1 April 1985. The Department has no similar estimates of non-traditional dwellings in the rest of the public sector and in the private sector, but HIP forms submitted by local authorities this year show that there are at least 2,639 prefabricated reinforced concrete dwellings in Yorkshire and Humberside in the rest of the public sector and in the private sector. The Department has no estimate of the number of these dwellings that require structural work. The Department does not collect information on the numbers of non-traditional dwellings that are demolished.

Sewerage

Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the number of miles of public sewers in the Yorkshire and Humberside region which are in poor condition; and what proportion of the total this represents.

Mr. John Patten: Yorkshire water authority has tentatively estimated that 200 out of the 2,400 miles forming the critical parts of its sewer network, and 1,150 of the remaining 12,400 miles, may be in poor structural condition. Information is not available for the Yorkshire and Humberside region as the economic region and the water authority areas differ. Investment in sewers has risen from £161 million in 1978-79 to around £290 million this year. Overall investment by water authorities (DOE services) will rise from around £818 million this year to £900 million next year.

Housing Investment Programme

Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what sums have been spent within the housing investment programme by each local authority in the Yorkshire and Humberside region in each of the years from and including 1979.

Sir George Young: Housing investment programme expenditure by each local authority in the Yorkshire and Humberside region in each of the financial years between 1978-79 and 1984-85 is as follows:

Council Houses (Purchase Terms)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what would be the weekly payment, at current interest rates but not including rent or rates, required to service purchase of a council flat or house valued at £20,000, £25,000, £30,000, £35,000, £40,000, £45,000 and £50,000, for tenants of two, five, 10, 15, 20 and 30 years' standing (a) by outright purchase and (b) by purchase of 25 per cent., 50 per cent., and 75 per cent. shared ownership.

Sir George Young: Using a typical building society mortgage interest rate of 12·75 per cent. per year, and assuming a 100 per cent. mortgage for a term of 25 years, the weekly mortgage repayments, net of tax relief, would be as follows:

Net weekly mortgage repayments
A. Outright purchase

Discount percentage	Value (£000's) 20	25	30	35	40	45	50
32	26·40	33·00	39·60	46·20	52·80	*56·80	*64·55

* These mortgage loans exceed the tax relief threshold of £30,000 and payments are therefore calculated in a slightly different way from the other figures. The payments shown here are for the first year of the loan and would rise slightly in each subsequent year.

Housing Starts

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate the number of new housing construction starts that are necessary each year to maintain the housing stock at existing levels of quality and quantity; and if he will estimate the percentage of this figure which was achieved in the last year for which figures are available.

Sir George Young: At 1984 rates of removal of dwellings from the housing stock, 22,000 new houses would be required annually to maintain the housing stock in England at the same size as at the end of 1984, that is to say 13 per cent. of the number started. Maintaining the quality of the stock depends far more on upkeep and renovation than on new building, hence there is no unique number of dwellings to be demolished and replaced to maintain the existing level of quality of the housing stock.

Local Government Bill

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will place in the Library examples of literature produced by local authorities which led him to propose the introduction of the Local Government Bill.

Mrs. Rumbold: The publicity provisions in the Local Government Bill were introduced on the basis of the recommendations of the Widdicombe inquiry's interim report on local authority publicity. The wide range of publicity material considered by the committee of inquiry in the course of its work was sent to it direct by the local authorities concerned.

Toxteth Riots (Compensation)

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many claims have been made for compensation following the Toxteth disturbances in 1985.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Five claims have been made for compensation following the Toxteth disturbances in the current year. The Merseyside county council, as statutory compensating authority, is investigating these claims.

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many claims for compensation have now been settled following the Toxteth riots in 1981.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The Merseyside county council has now settled 440 of the 723 claims received for riot damage compensation arising from the disturbances in Toxteth and other areas of Merseyside in 1981. Of those remaining, 276 claims were either withdrawn or rejected as not being eligible.

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the lowest settlement agreed for compensation to date following the Toxteth riots in 1981; and what was the highest.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Merseyside county council was responsible under the Riot Damages Act 1886 for settling compensation claims following the disturbances in Toxteth. Details of individual settlements are confidential to the county council and the claimants. I am not in a position therefore to state the highest or lowest settlements agreed for compensation.

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many claims for compensation are still outstanding arising from the Toxteth riots in 1981.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Following the Toxteth disturbances in 1981, the Merseyside county council, as statutory compensating authority, received 723 claims for compensation. Of those received, seven remain to be settled including cases where the claimants have not pursued their claims either following an offer by the county council or where contact has been lost with the claimant.

Home Improvement Grants

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take into consideration the rise in costs of building materials when deciding the amount available for home improvement grants.

Sir George Young: My right hon. Friend announced on 20 November the totals available for capital expenditure allocations to local authorities on the housing and other services blocks for 1986-87. Local authorities will be notified of their individual allocations before Christmas and it will then be for them to decide how much of their resources to make available for home improvement grants.

Silentnight Beds

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from the directors of Silentnight Beds concerning rollout mattresses for military use.

Sir George Young: In February 1985, Silentnight was invited by the Ministry of Defence and the Crown Suppliers jointly to demonstrate a rollout mattress.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether Silentnight Beds is involved in research work for his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: Although Silentnight was informed that additional development work would be necessary before the rollout mattress could be considered for purchase, I am not aware that it is undertaking any research work at present for either the Department of the Environment or for the Ministry of Defence.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what contracts have been awarded to Silentnight Beds by his Department.

Sir George Young: No record exists of any contracts having been awarded to Silentnight by the Department of the Environment.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for the Environment which companies have been involved in research work for his Department into rollout mattresses.

Sir George Young: None.

Hampstead Heath

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what arrangements he proposes for the future of Hampstead heath after the abolition of the Greater London council.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I have considered very carefully the responses to our proposal announced on 4 October that the Corporation of the City of London should own and manage Hampstead heath, apart from the land going to the Historic Buildings and Monuments Commission together with Kenwood house. The responses make it clear that views continue to vary about the future of the heath and to favour more than one option. In particular, the London borough of Camden has submitted substantive alternative proposals. I need to examine its proposal closely and to review it among other options. As Camden did not submit its proposals until October, despite first being asked to do so in January, it may be that final decisions on ownership and management cannot be reached in time to enable transfer to take place on abolition day. In that case responsibility for the heath will be passed to the London residuary body while permanent arrangements are being finalised. I remain firmly committed to the concept of unified management for the heath.

My noble friend the Minister of State is today inviting the leaders of the London boroughs of Barnet, Camden and Haringey to meet him to review the position.

EMPLOYMENT

Small Companies (Profitability)

Mr. Heddle asked the Paymaster General if he will extend the scope of his inquiry into the effect of late payment of accounts by large companies on the profitability of small companies to include the payment practices of Government Departments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: I assume my hon. Friend's question relates to discussions with representative organisations of the scope for reducing the problem of late payment of bills. The possibility of issuing guidance for customers and suppliers is under consideration. Government Departments already have standing instructions to pay bills promptly. Their practices will be taken into account in preparing guidance.

Information Technology

Mr. Wigley asked the Paymaster General what level of financial support for information technology centres he proposes for 1985-86 and 1986-87.

Mr. Trippier: In the financial year 1985-86 the Manpower Services Commission has made provision amounting to £24 million towards the cost of the information technology centre programme. The level of financial support in 1986-87 will be dependent on the outcome of a detailed review of the programme which is currently in progress.

Mr. Wigley asked the Paymaster General if he will take steps to safeguard the training capacity of information technology centres.

Mr. Trippier: A comprehensive review of the information technology centre programme is nearing completion. I cannot anticipate what conclusions will be reached. However, ITeCs have been invited to plan for 1986-87 on the assumption that the Manpower Services Commission will offer, nationally at least, the same number of youth training scheme places as at present.

Job Creation and Redundancy Payments

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Paymaster General if he will list the number of people in the west midlands who have subscribed to the enterprise allowance scheme and loan guarantee scheme and the number of redundancy payments to which his Department has contributed in the same region within the framework of the redundancy fund.

Mr. Trippier: Since the enterprise allowance scheme began nationally on 1 August 1983, 12,215 people have joined in the west midlands region as at 31 October 1985. Between June 1981 and September 1981, 1,435 loans were granted under the loan guarantee scheme to firms in the west midlands, covering a loan value of £45·6 million. No redundancy payments figures are available separately for the west midlands.

Tourism

Mr. Bevan asked the Paymaster General what steps he is taking to encourage local authorities to develop the tourism industry in their area.

Mr. Trippier: We have drawn attention to the important role of local authorities in fostering tourism in our recent report "Pleasure Leisure and Jobs — The Business of Tourism". We have circulated copies of this report to all local authorities and asked them to consider whether they could be doing more, through their existing powers and resources, to encourage the development of tourism and reap its benefits.

Health and Safety

Mr. Skinner asked the Paymaster General how many youth training scheme placements were (a) closed down and (b) not accepted on health and safety grounds in 1984.

Mr. Trippier: During 1984, 169 youth training scheme work placements were closed down and 61 were not accepted for the scheme primarily on health and safety grounds. In addition to these placements, one mode B1 scheme was closed in 1984 on grounds of health and safety.

Mr. Skinner asked the Paymaster General how many engineering apprenticeships were available in the east midlands in 1979 and 1984; and what was the comparable national figure for those years.

Mr. Trippier: The information is not available in the precise form requested. However, figures provided by the engineering industry training board show that the number of craft and technician trainees registered as commencing training in 1979-80 was 2,359 in the east midlands, and 26,202 nationally; the corresponding numbers for 1983-84 were 1,059 and 12,040.

The numbers entering traditional apprenticeships are becoming increasingly irrelevant as a measure of the real level of skills training being undertaken as industry's skill needs change. For many industries including the expanding new technology sector, apprenticeship is not the usual means of achieving full skills status. The youth training scheme already enables a substantial amount of initial skills training to be carried out, and the expanded two year scheme will provide increased opportunity for flexible skills training relevant to employers' needs.

Adult Training

Mr. Skinner asked the Paymaster General what are the most recent figures for the number of adult workers who receive training in the United Kingdom; and what information he has on comparable figures for West Germany.

Mr. Trippier: Information from the labour force survey carried out in the spring of 1984 indicates that about 2 million adults in employment had received some training during the four weeks before the survey interview. I regret that a comparable figure for West Germany is not available.

Hotel Classification

Mr. David Atkinson asked the Paymaster General when he expects to introduce the new hotel classification system in England.

Mr. Trippier: The English Tourist Board announced the introduction in England of the new voluntary classification system for tourist accommodation on 14

October. The new arrangements, which will also operate in Scotland and Wales, are being introduced immediately but will not fully supersede the existing scheme until 1 January 1987. Details of the new system are currently being circulated to the industry by the English Tourist Board. The Government fully support the new arrangements, which we believe will provide a better guarantee of standards without the need for statutory regulation and we hope that the scheme will be widely supported by the tourist industry.

GCHQ (ILO Conventions)

Mr. Dalyell asked the Paymaster General what recent representations he has received from the International Labour Organisation regarding Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the applicability of International Labour Organisation conventions to Government communications headquarters.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There have been no such representations from the International Labour Organisation since my reply to the hon. Member on 11 June at column 413. The comments relating to the GCHQ made by the committee of experts on the application of conventions and recommendations mentioned in that reply were discussed by the applications committee of the International Labour Conference on 18 June.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Parry asked the Paymaster General if he will make a statement on the latest unemployment figures.

Mr. Alan Clark: The following information is in the Library. On 10 October 1985 the number of unemployed claimants in the United Kingdom was 3,276,861.

Mr. Crowther asked the Paymaster General how many people are (a) employed and (b) unemployed in the Rotherham and Mexborough travel-to-work area; and what were the corresponding figures one year ago.

Mr. Alan Clark: Comprehensive employment statistics for travel-to-work areas are not available except for dates when censuses of employment are taken. Censuses have been taken triennially since 1978 and the latest results are for September 1981. At that time, there were 90,400 employees in employment in the Rotherham and Mexborough travel-to-work area. More up to date employment figures for travel-to-work areas will become available following the publication of the 1984 census of employment in the spring of 1986.

On 10 October 1985 the number of unemployed claimants in the Rotherham and Mexborough travel-to-work area was 22,700. The corresponding figure for October 1984 was 21,503.

Technical and Vocational Education Initiative

Mr. O'Brien asked the Paymaster General if he will make a statement on the technical and vocational education initiative and its future expansion.

Mr. Trippier: The initiative is now in its third year. In 1983 14 Local education authorities in England and Wales mounted the first TVEI projects, involving 144 schools and colleges. Last year the Government asked the Manpower Services Commission to extend the initiative and currently 74 projects in England, Scotland and Wales, with 500 schools and colleges are participating. Projects have proved to be popular and many have been oversubscribed. A further 28 proposals are currently being considered for a 1986 start.

In the White Papers "Better Schools" (Cmnd 9469) and "Education and Training for Young People" (Cmnd 9482), published earlier this year, the Government indicated their view that the TVEI projects were laying a foundation which must be built on. The Government have introduced a scheme of TVEI related in-service training for teachers and are considering the wider application of the lessons emerging from the initiative.

Enterprise Allowance Scheme

Mr. Ottaway asked the Paymaster General how many people have now benefited from the enterprise allowance scheme.

Mr. Trippier: Up to 31 October 1985, the latest date for which figures are available, 112,191 people have joined the enterprise allowance scheme.

Community Programme

Mr. Freeman asked the Paymaster General if he will make a statement on progress in expanding the community programme.

Mr. Alan Clark: At the end of October 1985 there were some 194,000 authorised places on the community programme projects of which 159,000 were filled. Steady progress is being made towards meeting the target of 230,000 filled places by the end of May 1986.

Systime plc

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Paymaster General what measures he is taking to assist future employment for those now threatened with redundancy at Systime plc.

Mr. Alan Clark: I understand that no announcement of redundancies has been made by Systime. If such an announcement is made, all the facilities of the Manpower Services Commission will be made available to help those made redundant find alternative employment or train for new jobs.

Mogul Foods Ltd.

Mr. Hancock asked the Paymaster General what were the circumstances that led to the claim on the small firms loan guarantee scheme by the lender with respect to a loan to Mogul Foods Ltd. in 1982.

Mr. Trippier: I am satisfied that a valid claim was made on this guarantee following a default by the borrower, Mogul Foods Ltd. I understand that there is a dispute about the circumstances which led to a default. This dispute is not a matter for my Department.

Jobcentres

Mr. McGuire asked the Paymaster General if he will make it his policy that the provision of assistance by the staff of jobcentres to unemployed persons is not refused on the ground of their ineligibility for supplementary benefit because they have cash assets in excess of £3,000; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: Assistance from jobcentre staff has always been available to anybody actively seeking a job. There are no plans to change this policy.

Wages

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Paymaster General what percentage of the working population earns less than 90 per cent. of the average wage.

Mr. Alan Clark: For full-time adult employees in Great Britain in April 1985, 50 per cent. earned less than 90 per cent. of average gross weekly earnings.

Youth Training

Mrs. Peacock asked the Paymaster General if he will make a statement on the standard of employment status and protection afforded to those on youth training scheme schemes.

Mr. Trippier [pursuant to his reply, 25 November]: The youth training scheme is open to eligible young people who are employed as well as those who are unemployed. Young people who are on the scheme as employees will have a contract of employment and will be subject to all the normal terms and conditions applicable to comparable employees and will have the same statutory protection afforded to employees generally.

Providers of training and work experience are under a contractual obligation to treat unemployed young people who are on the scheme in the same way as if they were employees in respect of health and safety and race and sex discrimination. That obligation is reinforced by legislation.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Blood Stocks

Mr. Skeet asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) for what length of time blood stocks may be banked without detriment;

(2) what percentage of blood taken from donors is stored at very low temperatures; and whether the vectors of venereal diseases and AIDS are eliminated under these storage conditions.

Mr. Hayhoe: The length of time for which fresh blood and red cell components may be kept for transfusion purposes depends upon the type of anti-coagulant additive used; this can extend shelf life up to 35 days.

Red cell components of blood may be frozen and stored at very low temperatures, with a shelf life of several years. This procedure is very expensive and is used by the national blood transfusion service only in respect of very rare blood groups. Stocks kept represent less than 0·1 per cent. of the 2·5 million donations collected each year.

Very low temperature storage is employed only to ensure the availability of sufficient stocks of very rare blood groups: it will not prevent transmission of infection. All donations are routinely screened for HTLV III antibody and syphilis.

Board and Lodging

Mr. Irving asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has as to the effects which the board and lodgings regulations have had on the level of charges made by landlords.

Mr. Newton: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply on 29 October to the hon. Members for Burnley (Mr. Pike), for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood) and for Oldham, West (Mr. Meacher) at columns 439-442.

Health Authorities (Land and Property Sales)

Mrs. Currie asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how much land and property has been sold by health authorities since 1979; how much money has been raised; and how that money has been used.

Mr. Whitney: The information for health authorities in England is as follows:

Year ending 31 March	Acres sold	Receipts £ million
1979	627	7·5
1980	375	9·9
1981	1,031	15·2
1982	1,199	19·4
1983	551	18·0
1984	858	31·5
1985	1,017	*49·0

* Provisional figure.

The proceeds of all sales are retained by health authorities and used for the further development of health services.

Legionnaire's Disease

Mr. Galley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what studies his Department has undertaken, in the light of recent outbreaks of Legionnaire's disease, into the efficacy of biocides as a means of eliminating Legionella bacteria in water cooling systems.

Mr. Hayhoe: None.

Reports on the investigation of the recent outbreaks of the disease in Stafford and Scotland have not yet been completed. I am advised that none of the reported outbreaks of the disease world wide has been associated with a water cooling system that has received regular conventional treatment with chlorine. However, my Department's officials are looking at the possibilities for developing a protocol for manufacturers on the in vitro testing of biocides.

War Widows (Pensions)

Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will consider reviewing the financial arrangements for war widows' pensions.

Mr. Major: War widows pensions are kept under regular review. They were increased on 25 November by seven per cent. The age allowances which are payable with war widows pensions, and which were improved significantly last year, were also increased by seven per cent. from 25 November.

Nurses and Midwives

Mr. Body asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will make a statement about the changes that have been made in the payment of overtime for unsocial hours worked by nurses and midwives.

Mr. Hayhoe: The 1985-86 report of the independent pay review for nursing staff, midwives and health visitors recommended that special duty payments for working unsocial hours (that is, percentage additions to basic pay rates for night and weekend working) should, for qualified nursing staff, be calculated on 1984-85 pay scales, whilst for unqualified staff 1985-86 pay scales should be used. The review body said that the purpose of this recommendation was to prevent any significant increase in the substantial amount of money being paid under this heading whilst the nursing and midwifery staffs negotiating council considered what is the right balance between basic pay and additional payments for a profession such as nursing. The review body took account of this adjustment in judging levels of basic pay and recommended higher increases for qualified than for unqualified staff.

The Government are implementing the review body's recommendations in two stages: five per cent. on the paybill from 1 April 1985 and the balance, giving total rises of up to 14·3 per cent. in the main clinical grades, from 1 February 1986. The recommendations in respect of special duty payments took effect from April.

The review body did not recommend any change in the basis for calculating overtime payments (that is, for hours worked in excess of 37½ per week). No change, therefore, has been made.

Physically and Sexually-abused Children

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what special funds are available to local authorities for the improvement of services dealing with the detection, treatment and rehabilitation of physically and sexually abused children.

Mr. Whitney: No special funds have been allocated to local authorities for services related to child abuse. The determination of priorities and allocation of resources for particular local services is for local authorities to decide within the resources available to them.

Smoking

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will place in the Library a copy of the National Opinion Poll survey by the Health Education Council on the effectiveness of national no smoking day 1985.

Mr. Whitney: An evaluation of the 1985 national no smoking day, which will include data from the National Opinion Poll survey, will be published shortly. Copies will be placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

North West Thames Regional Health Authority

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list in the Official Report a table showing the hospitals in the North West Thames region which now have contract cleaning instead of in-house organisation and the number of employees made redundant; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: The following cleaning contracts have been awarded to private contractors in the North West Thames region:

Health authority	Hospital unit
Ealing	Acute unit
Ealing	Community unit
Hounslow Spelthorne	Ashford hospital
Hounslow Spelthorne	South Middlesex small hospitals and community unit
Paddington	St. Mary's hospital
South Bedfordshire	St. Mary's hospital
Riverside	St. Mary Abbot hospital
Riverside	Westminster hospital

I regret that the other information requested is not available centrally.

Brent District Health Authority

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report the number of senior administrators employed by the Brent district health authority together with designated post and salary before the implementation of the Griffiths report and the number now in post or to be appointed together with designations and salaries.

Mr. Hayhoe: I regret that this information is not available centrally. I suggest the hon. Member contacts the district health authority to obtain the information he seeks.

Lipotriad

Mr. Lawrence asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what alternative or equivalent medicine there is on the restricted drugs list to Lipotriad.

Mr. Hayhoe: Lipotriad is a multivitamin preparation and an adequate range of vitamins are available on National Health Service prescription.

Benefit Statistics

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish a table showing for 1971, 1981 and the latest date for which estimates are available the number of households in the United Kingdom, with the figures broken down to distinguish between no family, one family and two or more family households, as in Social Trends No. 15 table 2·5 for Great Britain, but also showing whether the married couples and lone parents have one, two, three or more dependent children, with the latter defined as children aged under 16 years or 16 to 18 years in full-time education.

Mr. Whitney: Information on the number of dependent children in families is only readily available for Great Britain in 1981 and 1983 as follows.

I shall let my hon. Friend have further information as soon as it is available.

Following is the information:

*Households	1981 census		1983 general household survey†
	Numbers (thousands)	Percentages	Percentages
One family households
Married couple only	4,989	26	27
Married couple with one dependent child	2,251	12	11
Married couple with two dependent children	2,600	13	13
Married couple with three or more dependent children	1,100	6	6
Married couple with non-dependent child(ren) only	1,586	8	8
Lone parent with one dependent child	471	2	2
Lone parent with two dependent children	302	2	2
Lone parent with three or more dependent children	143	1	1
Lone parent with non-dependent child(ren) only	720	4	4
Two or more family households	170	1	1
No family households	5,126	26	26
Total households	19,493	100	*100

* Households may contain other persons in addition to a family. A family is defined as a married couple with or without dependent children or a lone parent with children. Dependent children are those aged under 16 or 16-18 and in full-time education.

† The relatively small sample size of the General Household Survey—in 1983 it covered 10,000 households—means that results cannot be up-rated to give reliable estimates of actual numbers comparable in detail to those given by the Census.

Percentages may not total 100 because of rounding.

Organ Transplants

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will now consider augmenting his donor card scheme by initiating a contracting in scheme for organ transplant provision; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will review the ways in which organs are obtained for transplants; and if he will make a statement on the current position.

Mr. Whitney: Under the provisions of the Human Tissue Act 1961, organs may be removed for transplantation either if the deceased person has previously indicated in writing his willingness to be a donor, for example by signing an organ donor card, or if after reasonable inquiry there are no grounds for believing that his relatives have any objection. Successive Governments have undertaken a series of intitiatives to increase the numbers of organs becoming available for transplantation, in particular through encouraging people to carry a signed donor card.

Donor organs are still urgently needed and we are constantly seeking new ways of increasing public awareness of the benefits of organ transplantation and promoting the donor card scheme, but we see no need at present for a review of the ways in which organs are obtained. The largest computer register of people who are willing to donate their organs after their death in the United Kingdom is in Manchester, and we are watching its progress. We are considering ways in which a computer register might be provided on a national basis, if experience with the local schemes appears to justify this, but we do not expect to be able to make any announcement in the immediate future.

Renal Failure

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what change there has been in the resources devoted to end-stage renal failure over the past five years; if he will indicate statistically the growth or decline in such provision; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: The provision of services for adult renal patients is a health authority responsibility, and information on the resources devoted to renal services is not collected centrally. Each regional health authority has agreed to accept new renal patients for treatment at an annual rate of at least 40 per million population by 1987, and we are monitoring their progress. The annual take-on rate in England rose from 21·0 per million in 1979 to 35·7 per million in 1984, and in a number of regions the 40 per million target has already been exceeded. The treatment of renal patients under the age of 16 was designated as a supra regional service from April 1984, and the funds allocated for its provision since then were £2,808,000 in 1984-85 and £3,343,000 in 1985-86 (both at 1985-86 cash levels). We expect to announce the 1986-87 allocation within the next few weeks.

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people died of kidney failure over the past five years; if he will estimate what proportion of these people could have been saved if suitable kidney and transplant facilities had been available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: This information is not collectd centrally in the form requested. Office of Population Censuses and Surveys figures for England and Wales, given below, show the total number of cases where nephritis, nephrotic syndrome and nephrosis, chronic renal failure, and renal failure, unspecified, were recorded as the primary cause of death.

	Number
1980	7,986
1981	8,573
1982	8,951
1983	8,498
1984*	7,914

* 1984 figures are not compatible with those for earlier years because of a change in data coding.

These totals exclude cases, such as diabetic nephropathy, where the data coding classifies the death under the primary disease causing renal failure.

It is impossible to estimate the proportion of people who might not have died if more treatment facilities had been available. Some of those who died would have been receiving treatment and the majority of cases recorded would not be regarded as treatable because of the presence of other diseases.

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the growth or decline in care of end-stage renal failure patients in terms of home dialysis, hospital dialysis continuous ambulatory peritoneal dialysis and transplants over the past five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: According to data provided by the European Dialysis and Transplant Association, the numbers of renal patients on treatment at 31 December during each of the years shown were as follows:

	Home dialysis	Hospital dialysis	*CAPD	With functioning transplant
1980	2,064	1,241	520	3,111
1981	2,162	1,373	907	3,532
1982	2,218	1,490	1,225	3,994
1983	2,135	1,536	1,485	4,360
1984	2,095	1,658	1,908	5,574

* Continuous ambulatory peritoneal dialysis.

Vaccination

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many children in each year since 1981 completed courses of vaccination with the following vaccines or combination of vaccines: (a) pertussis/diphtheria/tetanus (triple), (b) triple/polio, (c) triple/smallpox, (d) triple/measles, (e) triple/polio/smallpox, (f) pertussis, (g) pertussis/polio, (h) pertussis/diphtheria/polio, (i) pertussis/polio/tetanus, (j) pertussis/diphtheria/rubella and (k) pertussis/diphtheria.

Mr. Whitney: The information available is as follows:

Number of children under 16 completing primary courses of immunisation (England)

	1981	1982	1983	1984
Pertussis Diphtheria Tetanus (triple)	318,452	358,064	382,182	387,659
Pertussis	1,775	26,603	23,182	3,744
Pertussis/Diphtheria	260	155	167	216

Information is not held centrally on the other combinations quoted. It is recommended that children receive oral polio vaccine at the same time as the triple vaccine. Numbers for oral polio were:

1981	1982	1983	1984
554,342	559,782	526,407	526,092

Smallpox vaccination has not formed part of the United Kingdom immunisation recommendations since 1981.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many vaccine-damage payments have been awarded for damage from a vaccine which according to the parents' recollection included a pertussis element in each year since 1981; and if he will give the total number of payments in each of these years.

Mr. Whitney: The information, up to 8 November 1985, the latest date for which figures are available, is as follows:

Number of awards made in which vaccination was stated by claimant to include a pertussis element

Year	Number	Total awards
1981	62	74
1982	30	43
1983	31	42
1984	24	29

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the total number of people on hospital waiting lists in the Portsmouth and South East Hampshire health district for the years 1979 to 1984, on 31 March and by specialty.

Mr. Whitney: The information requested is given in the table.

Number of cases on in-patient waiting list for admission to NHS hospitals at 31 March—Portsmouth and South East Hampshire district health authority

Mental Illness (Hospital Provision)

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he is satisfied with provision for the mentally handicapped and the mentally ill in the Portsmouth and South East Hampshire health district with the reorganisation of hospitals in that area.

Mr. Whitney: The Portsmouth and South East Hampshire health authority is responsible for the provision of health services in its area. The authority's plans for the reorganisation and development of its services for mentally handicapped and mentally ill people have been widely consulted upon. The plans accord with national and local policies of developing community-based care for these patients.

St. James's Hospital, Portsmouth

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received about the proposed closure of St. James's hospital, Portsmouth.

Mr. Whitney: None.

Whooping Cough

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many children were vaccinated against whooping cough in each year since 1974 and to date; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will launch a publicity campaign on whooping cough and the case for vaccination.

Mr. Whitney: The information requested is given in the table:

Children under age 16 completing primary courses of immunisation against whooping cough: England

Year	Number of children
1974	*428,300
1975	*247,900
1976	*240,600
1977	191,899
1978	250,250
1980	285,561
1981	320,496
1982	384,827
1983	405,744
1984	391,699

*Includes estimated numbers for one Area Health Authority.

The Department has provided additional funding of £483,000 to the Health Education Council to allow it to co-ordinate a national campaign. The campaign was launched in September and will run for the expected period of the whooping cough epidemic.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many children have contracted whooping cough in each year since 1974 and to date.

Mr. Whitney: The latest available figures on notifications of whooping cough are shown in the table.

Corrected number of notifications of whooping cough in 0-14 age-group 1974-1985 England and Wales

Year	Number
1974	15,677
1975	8,514

* 1 January to 15 November (provisional).

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the contraction rate of whooping cough.

Mr. Whitney: Notification rates for whooping cough for 1974-1984 are given in the table.

Corrected number of notifications of whooping cough per 100,000 population, 1974-1984, all ages England and Wales

Year	Rate

Child Benefit

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the number of single mothers who have withdrawn claims for child benefit in each single year since 1979, the number of case papers which have been requested from benefit officers' staff by social security fraud squad officers in each single year since 1979; and if he will list the total number of officers who have been employed by his Department as fraud squad investigators during the same period giving a breakdown of the regions of the country to which they have been assigned.

Mr. Major [pursuant to his reply, 21 November 1985, c. 285]: I regret that the information requested concerning withdrawn claims for child benefit is not available. If the hon. Member has in mind the Department's special claims control teams which were set up in 1981 and are the only fraud staff working in groups, the following table sets out a region by region breakdown of staff numbers for the last two years and a national total for the preceding two years. The number of case papers referred by benefit officers to the teams is not available.

Children at Risk

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what training residential social workers receive in the identification of non-accidental injuries and the protection of children at risk of such injuries.

Mr. Whitney [pursuant to his reply, 22 November 1985, c. 338]: Residential social workers who hold recognised social work qualifications will have received training on work with children and families. In-service training on child abuse for both qualified and unqualified workers is provided by employing authorities. Detailed information on such training is not held centrally but the types of training available include induction training for new staff, multi-disciplinary day seminars under the auspices of the local inter-agency child abuse review committee and day release courses promoted by the Central Council for Education and Training in Social Work and other recognised training organisations.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Clothing and Textiles

Sir John Farr asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if he will list total United Kingdom textile and clothing imports from the Philippines in 1984 and total Philippine textile and clothing imports from the United Kingdom in the same year;

(2) if he will list total United Kingdom textile clothing imports from India in 1984 and the total Indian textile and clothing imports from the United Kingdom in the same year;

(3) if he will list total United Kingdom textile and clothing imports from Pakistan in 1984 and total Pakistani textile and clothing imports from the United Kingdom in the same year;

(4) if he will list total United Kingdom textile and clothing imports from Turkey in 1984 and total Turkish textile and clothing imports from the United Kingdom in the same year.

Mr. Channon: The information is as follows:

Value £ million

	United Kingdom imports (cif)	United Kingdom exports (fob)
India	133·7	7·1
Turkey	74·2	10·8
Pakistan	41·5	12·6
Philippines	21·1	1·8

Source: Data corresponding to SITC R2 Divisions 65 and 84 (less Group 848), Groups 266 and 267 and from Sub-group 268·7, Tariff codes 5305-3100,-3811 and -3898 in the United Kingdom Overseas Trade Statistics.

Sir John Farr asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what is the current United Kingdom tariff on fabric imports from India and the similar Indian tariff on fabric imports from the United Kingdom;

(2) if he will list the United Kingdom tariff on garment imports from India and the current Indian tariff on garments from the United Kingdom;

(3) to what extent United Kingdom garment, fabric, textile, and clothing exports to India are limited by import bans.

Mr. Channon: Imports from the United Kingdom of garments, fabrics, textiles and clothing into India are on a list of "restricted items" and are only allowed at the discretion of the Indian authorities. Information on United Kingdom tariffs on these products is available in "HM Customs and Excise Tariff", chapters 50 to 63, a copy of which is in the Library, but the broad range of tariffs is 3·5 to 17·3 per cent.

Sir John Farr asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what is the current United Kingdom tariff on fabric imports from Pakistan and the similar Pakistani tariff on fabric imports from the United Kingdom;

(2) if he will list the United Kingdom tariff on garment imports from Pakistan and the current Pakistani tariff on garment imports from the United Kingdom;

(3) to what extent United Kingdom garment, fabric, textile, and clothing exports to Pakistan are limited by import bans.

Mr. Channon: Pakistani import tariffs on fabrics lie in the broad range of 150 to 200 per cent. However, the import of most garments, fabrics, textiles and clothing into Pakistan is currently banned or severely restricted. I am placing a copy of a list of these items in the Library. Full information on United Kingdom tariffs on these products is available in "HM Customs and Excise Tariff", chapters 50 to 63, a copy of which is also in the Library, but the broad range of tariffs is 3·5 to 17·3 per cent.

Sir John Farr asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what is the current United Kingdom tariff on fabric imports from the Philippines and the similar Philippine tariff on fabric imports from the United Kingdom;

(2) if he will list the United Kingdom tariff on garment imports from the Philippines and the current Philippine tariff on garment imports from the United Kingdom;

(3) to what extent United Kingdom garment, fabric, textile and clothing exports to the Philippines are limited by import bans.

Mr. Channon: There are no formal bans on the import of garments, fabrics, textiles and clothing into the Philippines, but the import of certain of these items requires permits from various Government agencies. I am placing a list of such products in the Library. Philippine tariffs on fabrics lie in the broad range of 40 to 50 per cent. and the tariff on garments is 50 per cent. Information on United Kingdom tariffs on these products is available in "HM Customs and Excise Tariff", chapters 50 to 63, a copy of which is in the Library, but the broad range of tariffs is 3·5 to 17·3 per cent.

Sir John Farr asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what is the current United Kingdom tariff on fabric imports from Turkey and the similar Turkish tariff on fabric imports from the United Kingdom;

(2) if he will list the United Kingdom tariff on garment imports from Turkey and the current Turkish tariff on garment imports from the United Kingdom;

(3) to what extent United Kingdom garment, fabric, textile and clothing exports to Turkey are limited by import bans.

Mr. Channon: There are no bans on imports from the United Kingdom of garments, fabrics, textiles and clothing into Turkey, although for certain of these items prior approval from the Turkish Treasury and Foreign Trade Ministry is required. Turkish import tariffs on fabric lie in the broad range of 20 to 50 per cent. and those on garments lie in the broad range of 40 to 50 per cent. Full information on United Kingdom tariffs on these products is available in "Her Majesty's Customs and Excise Tariff", chapters 50 to 63, a copy of which is in the Library, but the broad range of tariffs is 3·5 to 17·3 per cent.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment his Department is making of the likely effect on British industry of a Channel fixed link.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The French and United Kingdom Governments are together undertaking a detailed assessment of all aspects of the proposals received for a Channel fixed link, including the opportunities they will provide for British industry.

Systime plc

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assurances were given to the Government at the time of the Control Data Corporation initial investment in Systime plc as to continuity of employment and production; and if those assurances are still valid.

Mr. Butcher: None. Systime was at the time in serious financial difficulty and needed a substantial outside investment to avoid almost certain failure.

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations his officials have made to the United States Government in relation to the affairs of Systime plc in Leeds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Channon: My officials have raised the matter of United States export controls as they affect the company with the United States authorities on a number of occasions. It is not our practice to comment in detail on individual cases.

National Space Centre

Mr. Silvester asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if he will list the locations which were examined before deciding the site for the National Space Centre;

(2) why he has located the National Space Centre in London.

Mr. Pattie: Most of the elements comprising the British National Space Centre already contribute to the national space effort and they will remain at their existing locations. The bulk of the BNSC's personnel will be specialist scientific and technical staff based at the Royal Aircraft Establishment, Farnborough, and the Rutherford Appleton Laboratory, Chilton. Headquarters functions will for the present be brought together in a small unit at Millbank Tower in London. The alternative location for the headquarters, at the Royal Aircraft Establishment, was found not to be an early practical possibility owing to problems of accommodation and the need at first to work closely with the participating government departments. The ultimate location of the BNSC's headquarters will be a matter for consideration by the new director general, Mr. Roy Gibson.

Mr. Michael Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement concerning the structure, funding and objectives of the British National Space Centre.

Mr. Pattie: Last week I appointed Mr. Roy Gibson as the first director general of the British National Space Centre (BNSC). The BNSC will have two main elements: a technology directorate and a policy and programmes directorate. The technology directorate will be based on those parts of existing establishments which currently undertake space-related research, notably at the Royal Aircraft Establishment, Farnborough, and the Rutherford Appleton Laboratory, Chilton, involving the equivalent of some 100 and 140 full-time staff respectively.

The policy and programmes directorate will consist of about 35 staff forming the headquarters unit at Millbank Tower, London. These staff will be drawn from organisations participating in the centre: the Department of Trade and Industry, the Ministry of Defence, the Science and Engineering Research Council and the Natural Environment Research Council.

One of BNSC's principal aims will be to provide better co-ordination of Britain's £100 million a year space research and development effort, responsibility for which is presently spread amongst the participants. To this end I have asked Mr. Gibson to develop a longer-term space strategy taking into account scientific and industrial interests and the needs of both civil and defence users.

The other principal aim of BNSC will be to improve the development of space technology in the United Kingdom. BNSC will undertake a coherent programme of research and development and will provide a focus for technical support for the growing range of space users. Both users and industry will be able to participate in the management of BNSC's programmes by making contributions to them, either financial or in kind. BNSC will facilitate the development of joint programmes in the many areas which are of interest to several sections of the space community.

For the time being, Government expenditure on space will be met from departmental votes with costs lying where they currently fall. Staff working in BNSC will continue to be employed by their parent organisation with unchanged conditions of service. However, I have asked Mr. Gibson to consider future arrangements for funding and staffing the BNSC.

Life Insurance Policies

Mr. Dykes asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if, before reaching a final decision as to whether to seek to compel salesmen in the United Kingdom to disclose their commissions when marketing life insurance policies, he will have regard to the practice in the rest of the European Economic Community, the United States of America and the major countries of the Commonwealth; and what such information is presently available to him.

Mr. Howard [pursuant to his reply, 25 November 1985]: The proposals on commissions disclosure for independent life assurance intermediaries reflects the general principle in the financial services White Paper that agents should disclose their interest in a transaction. Practices in other countries are of little relevance, given the special features of the United Kingdom insurance market, and the fact that foreign intermediaries carrying on investment business in the United Kingdom will be subject to the same disclosure obligations.

Johnson Matthey Bankers

Mr. Sedgemore asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) when he first became aware of possible losses to the Export Credits Guarantee Department arising out of alleged fraudulent trading by customers of Johnson Matthey Bankers and other banks;

(2) when he first became aware of possible irregularities concerning guarantees given by the Export Credits Guarantee Department in relation to trade since 1981 carried on by customers of Johnson Matthey Bankers and other banks; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Channon [pursuant to his reply, 25 November 1985]: In the autumn of 1984 the Export Credits Guarantee Department asked City of London police to investigate a number of transactions where apparent irregularities relating to the Department's guarantees had come to light. Police inquiries are continuing on these and other transactions. The ECGD is co-operating fully with the police, and will continue to do so.

DEFENCE

Fylingdales

13. Mr. Michie asked the Secretary of State for Defence when he next expects to pay a visit to Fylingdales.

23. Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Defence when he next intends to visit Fylingdales early-warning station.

Mr. Heseltine: I have no immediate plans to do so.

35. Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the upgrading of the radar facilities at Fylingdales.

Mr. Heseltine: I refer the hon. Member to the answer which my hon. Friend the Minister of State for Defence Procurement gave him on 30 October 1985 at column 504.

Procurement Programme

14. Mr. Favell asked the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he proposes to take to extend competitive tendering with regard to defence procurement contracts.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The requirement to seek competitive tenders for defence equipment purchases whenever it is practical and sensible to do so is taken into account from the earliest stages of a project. We pay particular regard to this aspect when considering new projects. As a consequence of these actions the proportion, by value, of contracts placed following competitive tendering is increasing. At the same time we are taking steps to ensure that competitive tendering is employed to the full by our contrators when they place work at the sub-contract level.

50. Mr. Stern asked the Secretary of State for Defence what savings he expects to make in the current year from increased competition in defence procurement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: It is not possible to quantify the overall savings which since the price we would otherwise have had to pay is not necessarily known. Savings in individual cases have been considerable, however, and our experience confirms that competition has a central role to play in our policy of achieving the best value for money in our defence procurement.

Communications System

15. Mr. Norman Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has as to why Thomson CSF of France was chosen in preference to Plessey UK as suppliers of the major United States/North Atlantic Treaty Organisation communications system.

Mr. Heseltine: GTE and Rockwell offered systems which incorporated elements provided by Thomson CSF and Plessey respectively. The American Government have told us that both systems met their requirements and that their choice was made purely on cost grounds.

Tornado Aircraft

16. Mr. Wilkinson asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will make a statement on the initiation of a mid-life update programme for the Tornado aircraft of the Royal Air Force.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Together with our Tornado partners we are currently studying options to enable Tornado to continue to meet the evolving threat through the 1990s and into the early part of the next century. These options include updating the aircraft performance, avionic fit and weapons carriage capability. Decisions on the way ahead will not be made until next year.

Cyprus Secrets Trial

17. Sir Anthony Meyer asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he is ready to make a further statement regarding the treatment of the seven service men from Cyprus recently acquitted of offences under the Official Secrets Act.

Mr. Stanley: No. It would not be right to do so during the currency of Mr. Calcutt's inquiry.

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether Mr. David Calcutt QC will take evidence on oath at his inquiry announced by the Minister of State for the Armed Forces on 29 October.

Mr. Stanley: In answer to the hon. Member on 29 October I said that my understanding was that Mr. Calcutt would have power to take evidence on oath but not power to compel the taking of evidence on oath. However, having taken further advice, I now understand that because Mr. Calcutt's inquiry is non-statutory, it does not have the power to administer oaths and therefore to take evidence on that basis.

Type 23 Frigate

18. Mr. Duffy asked the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to place the order for the next type 23 frigate.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Tenders for the next three type 23 frigates are due in mid-December 1985, but the precise size and timing of any orders have yet to be determined.

Falklands War (Medal)

19. Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many Falklands medals have been issued; at what cost to each recipient individual; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: Some 28,000 South Atlantic medals were issued. No charge is made to recipients of campaign medals.

Emergency Powers

20. Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on his Department's role in emergency powers planning.

Mr. Heseltine: As my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister explained in answer to the hon. member for Kingston-upon-Hull, north (Mr. McNamara) on 11 November at column 50, the need for emergency legislation has been kept under review by successive Governments. My Department is naturally closely involved in this process.

General Belgrano

21. Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether, when he made his speech on 18 February during the debate in the House on the General Belgrano, he had seen the original draft of Sir John Nott's statement to the House of Commons of 4 May 1982.

Mr. Heseltine: I have not seen the original draft of Sir John Nott's statement of 4 may 1982, but I was of course aware that, as with most statements made to Parliament, it went through a number of drafts. These matters were gone into at great length in the autumn of 1984 and were dealt with in my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister's letters of 8 October and 16 November 1984 to the right hon. Member for Plymouth, Devonport (Dr. Owen). There is nothing more to be said about them.

Japanese Prisoners of War (Compensation)

22. Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has had any discussions during the past six months with (a) the United States authorities or (b) the Japanese authorities concerning compensation for prisoners of war held by the Japanese at Mukden, who may have been used for testing the effects of germ and chemical warfare techniques.

Mr. Stanley: I refer the hon. Member to the letter that my noble Friend the Minister of State for Defence Support has recently sent to him on this matter.

Ptarmigan System

24. Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether the Ptarmigan system is already in service with the Army; and what has been the Government's investment in it to date.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Deployment of the Ptarmigan system to BAOR commenced at the end of 1984 and it is now operational with the first of the user divisions. It is anticipated that the whole of the 1st British Corps area will be covered by the middle of next year. Spending on the project to date has been approximately £650 million.

Strategic Defence Initiative

25. Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the programme of research into the strategic defence initiative.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I have nothing to add to what I said to the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Kingston upon Hull, North (Mr. McNamara) on 22 November at column 356.

36. Mr. O'Neill asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on British defence manufacturers' expected share of strategic defence initiative research.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Discussions have taken place between the United States and United Kingdom Governments, both at official and ministerial levels, to explore the potential for substantial British participation in the United States SDI research programme that would involve the defence industries, universities and research institutions. The Government are still considering the question.

42. Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Defence what defence-related technology Her Majesty's Government hope to secure as a result of participation in the strategic defence initiative.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Discussions with the United States about participation in the SDI research programme have taken into account the potential for deriving advanced technologies of defence related value. The Government are still considering the question.

49. Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Defence what are the implications for the British independent nuclear deterrent of the development by the United States of America of the strategic defence initiative.

Mr. Stanley: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend to the hon. Members for Houghton and Washington (Mr. Boyes), for Stretford (Mr. Lloyd) and for St. Helens, North (Mr. Evans) on 30 April at column 126.

51. Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence when he intends to publish the agreements he has reached with the United States Department of Defence on strategic defence initiative research.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I have nothing to add to the reply I gave to the hon. Gentleman on 22 November 1985.

Nerve Weapons

26. Mr. Boyes asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give an assurance that neither nerve weapons nor materials to produce such weapons will be allowed into the United Kingdom from any source whatsoever.

Mr. Stanley: The Government's policy on chemical weapons was set out in the reply my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Bexleyheath (Mr. Townsend) on 10 January at column 901. There has been no change in Government policy since then. Some chemicals that could be used as precursors for chemical weapons are the same chemicals that are widely used for normal and bona fide industrial purposes and are not therefore subject to an import ban.

Nuclear Weapons

27. Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the level of British nuclear weapons, in the light of the Reagan-Gorbachov summit.

Mr. Stanley: The position of the United Kingdom deterrent in relation to arms control has been made clear to the House on a number of occasions, most recently by my right hon. Friend the Foreign and Commonwealth Secretary in the Debate on the Address on 8 November at column 227.

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish in the Official Report a copy of the reply from the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces of 17 June to the chairperson of Christian CND on the circumstances in which nuclear weapons may lawfully be used; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: Subject to the views of the recipient, my noble Friend will place a copy in the Library.

China

28. Sir Dudley Smith asked the Secretary of State for Defence what consultations he has had with the Chinese defence authorities with a view to promoting better understanding and co-operation between China and the Western European Union countries.

Mr. Heseltine: My right hon. Friend the Minister of State for the Armed Forces visited China in 1984 and over the last two years there has been a number of reciprocal visits between British service chiefs of staff and their Chinese opposite numbers. Contacts have also taken place at lower levels and we are continuing to encourage a closer dialogue with China on a wide range of defence issues.

Swan Hunter

29. Mr. Nicholas Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement regarding the future warship ordering programme for Swan Hunter's shipyard.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Swan Hunter Shipbuilders has tendered, in competition, for the first two auxiliary oiler replenishment vessels. The yard has been invited to negotiate for the second type 23 frigate—in accordance with the statement made by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence on 28 January 1985 at column 21—and has also been invited to compete with other United Kingdom yards for the third and fourth type 23 frigate orders. The precise timing and size of the orders has yet to be determined.

Courts Martial

30. Mr. Ashton asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he intends to alter the regulations regarding courts martial following the acquittal of the Cyprus airmen.

41. Mr. Loyden asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he has any plans to review the courts martial procedure.

Mr. Stanley: I cannot anticipate the outcome of the inquiry being conducted by Mr. David Calcutt, QC or of my right hon. Friend's consideration of Mr. Calcutt's report.

Regarding courts martial, I refer the hon. Member to what I said on this matter in the Second Reading debate of the Armed Forces Bill on 21 November at column 439.

Dr. Richard Wagner

31. Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Defence when he next intends to meet Richard Wagner, Special Assistant to the United States Secretary of State for Defence, to discuss defence matters.

40. Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for Defence when he next plans to meet Dr. Richard Wagner, Special Assistant to the United States Secretary of State for Defence, to discuss defence matters.

Mr. Heseltine: I refer the hon. Members to the reply I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Central (Mr. Caborn).

Crown Proceedings Act

32. Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he has any plans to seek to change section 10 of the Crown Proceedings Act and its application to matters within his responsibility.

Mr. Stanley: I cannot at present add to the reply given to the right hon. Gentleman by my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Defence Procurement on 26 July at columns 876-77.

37. Mr. Churchill asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he is satisfied with the operation of the Crown Proceedings Act.

Mr. Stanley: I cannot at present add to the reply given to the right hon. Member for Stoke on Trent, South (Mr. Ashley) on 26 July at columns 876-77.

Trident

33. Mr. Roy Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the latest estimate of the cost of the Trident project.

Mr. Norman Lamont: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced an estimate of the cost of Trident of £9,285 million at 1984-85 prices and at an exchange rate of £1 = $1.38 on 29 January.

45. Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Defence in what ways the Trident independent deterrent will depend on United States technology.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The Trident D5 strategic weapon system, including its missiles, is to be purchased from the United States and will therefore use United States technology developed as part of their Trident programme. Co-operation with the United States on Trident in this and other areas does not affect the operational independence of the deterrent.

Cruise Missiles

34. Mr. Flannery asked the Secretary of State for Defence if the disposition of United States cruise missiles in the United Kingdom has now been completed.

Mr. Stanley: The position remains as stated in the reply that I gave to the hon. Member on 26 June 1984 at column 418.

RAF Binbrook

38. Mr. Leigh asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the future of RAF Binbrook.

Mr. Stanley: The position remains as stated to my hon. Friend in the reply given to him by my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Defence Procurement on 26 June 1984 at column 802.

Summit Meeting (Defence Implications)

39. Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has had any discussion with the United States Administration about the defence implication for Britain of the outcome of the summit meeting between Mr. Gorbachev and Mr. Reagan; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heseltine: My right hon. Friends the Prime Minister and the Foreign and Commonwealth Secretary both attended President Reagan's briefing of the North Atlantic Council on the outcome of the meeting with Mr. Gorbachev. The Prime Minister made it clear that she was very grateful to President Reagan for his efforts to make the summit a success. We hope it will give a major impetus to arms control negotiations and to the improvement of East-West relations. I look forward to exchanging views about the outcome when I next see Mr. Weinberger.

Research and Development

43. Mr. Sackville asked the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he is taking to commercialise the results of publicly funded defence research and development.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Commercial exploitation is sought and encouraged through the British technology group, the patenting of inventions and direct contracts between the Department and industry.

These arrangements are now complemented by the activities of Defence Technology Enterprises, a private sector company established as a joint initiative with the specific purpose of identifying ideas with commercial potential and arranging for their exploitation.

Civil Aircraft

44. Mr. McWilliam asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many civil aircraft he has on lease for Ministry of Defence purposes.

Mr. Stanley: There are no leased civil aircraft which are flown and operated by Ministry of Defence personnel. However, there are many contracts with civil aircraft operators for such services as the carriage of Ministry of Defence passengers and freight, and target towing, where the operator both provides the aircraft and operates it.

Royal Dockyards

46. Mr. Douglas asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the consultations between his Department and trade unions on the future of the royal dockyards.

Mr. Lee: The future of the royal dockyards has been discussed at industrial and non-industrial Whitley committee meetings at both national and local level. In addition, a consultation group has been set up within the Department, chaired by the under-secretary heading the dockyard planning team; this is being used as a forum for discussing the future of the dockyards with trades unions at national level.

Chemical Weapons

47. Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the number and type of chemical weapons held by the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics; and what information he has as to the level of training members of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics' armed forces have in the use of such weapons.

Mr. Stanley: The USSR has a major chemical warfare capability. Its chemical weapon stockpile is assessed to include some 300,000 tonnes of nerve agent alone. The Soviet Union possesses the means to deliver chemical weapons against targets throughout western Europe, including the United Kingdom. It has some 90,000 specialist troops responsible for aspects of nuclear, biological and chemical warfare. Soviet forces are also comprehensively equipped and trained to operate in a chemically contaminated environment.

A new United States non-classified assessment, with which Her Majesty's Government are generally in agreement, entitled "Soviet Chemical Weapons Threat", has recently been published by the United States Defence Intelligence Agency, and I have placed a copy in the Library.

"Highway Code"

48. Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether his Department gives advice to visiting forces about adherence to the "Highway Code" during military exercises conducted in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for Defence what advice his Department gives to visiting forces about adhering to the "Highway Code" during military exercises in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Stanley: I refer the hon. Members to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Caerphilly (Mr. Davies) earlier today.

Helicopters

52. Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement concerning the Wessex V and Puma replacement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I have nothing to add to the answer which I gave to the hon. Members for Ashfield (Mr. Haynes) and for Manchester, Blackley (Mr. Eastham) on 22 October at columns 129-31.

Defence Expenditure

53. Mr. Haynes asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has any plans to conduct a review of defence expenditure.

Mr. Heseltine: Defence expenditure is kept under continuing review, particularly at this time of the year when detailed plans have to be reconciled with available cash.

Iran and Iraq

54. Mr. Ron Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a policy statement on arms sales to Iran and Iraq.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Foreign and Commonwealth Secretary to the right hon. Member for Tweeddale, Ettrick and Lauderdale (Mr. Steel) on 29 October 1985 at column 454.

NATO

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he has evaluated or received evaluations of the military implications of incorporating seven USAF B-52 bomber aircraft, based at RAF Fairford, in NATO's recent Cold Fire and Display Determination exercises conducted with the Autumn Forge programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: The B-52 aircraft concerned were temporarily deployed to RAF Fairford for exercise purposes. My right hon. Friend did not receive, nor would he expect to receive, evaluations of the specific part played by the forces of an allied nation in these multinational NATO exercises.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he has participated in the recent intensification in planning for the redeployment of large strategic bombers in NATO's follow on force attack doctrine; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he has consulted the United States Government and other North Atlantic Treaty Organisation allies about plans to incorporate European-based United States air force B-52 bomber aircraft into the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation's follow on forces attack doctrine and deployments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: Follow on force attack is a NATO long-term planning guideline aimed at improving NATO's ability to counter by conventional means one aspect of the Warsaw pact threat, namely, that posed by follow-on-forces. It is not directly concerned with NATO deployments. Responsibility for detailed operational planning within NATO is a matter for the major NATO commanders, and it is not in any case our practice to comment on such planning.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secetary of State for Defence if he has been consulted by the United States Government and other North Atlantic Treaty Organisation allies with regard to the supplementation of existing European F111 and Tornado aircraft deployments with United States air force B52 bomber aircraft deployments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: Unlike F111 and Tornado aircraft, which are based permanently in the United Kingdom in peace time, B52 aircraft deploy to the United Kingdom in peace time only temporarily for exercises in connection with their conventional role. Proposals for these exercise deployments are subject to the prior approval of Her Majesty's Government.

El Salvador

Mr. John Fraser asked the Secretary of State for Defence if any officers from El Salvador are currently being trained under his Department in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the right hon. Member for Brent, East (Mr. Freeson) on 25 October at column 275.

Soviet Ballistic Missiles

Mr. Cash asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the latest information available to his Department about Soviet ballistic missile defence activity.

Mr. Stanley: I have today placed in the Library of the House a paper prepared by the Ministry of Defence, the text of which is as follows:

The Soviet Ballistic Missile Defence Programme

Introduction

1. The 1972 Anti-Ballistic Missile (ABM) Treaty, as amended by a 1974 Protocol, allows the United States and the Soviet Union to deploy one static ABM system with up to 100 launchers in defence of either an intercontinental ballistic missile silo field or the national capital. Development, testing or deployment of sea, air, space or mobile land-based ABM systems or components is forbidden although research into such systems is not precluded. If "ABM systems based on other physical principles and including components capable of substituting for ABM interceptor missiles, ABM launchers or ABM radars" are created there is an obligation under the 'Agreed Inter pretations' of the Treaty for the signatories to enter into discussions aimed at limiting those systems.

The Soviet Position

2. The Soviet Union has the only deployed ABM system in the world. It is currently being upgraded and when completed will consist of 100 static launchers sited around Moscow, the maximum permitted under the 1972 ABM Treaty. The system will comprise a mix of the existing GALOSH missiles, which are nuclear tipped and designed to intercept their target outside the atmosphere, and the newer high acceleration vehicles (HAV) which are designed to intercept missiles after they have re-entered the atmosphere. This system will enable discrimination against all but the most elaborate penetration aids and will, when deployment is completed in the late 1980's provide a limited two layer ABM defence system around Moscow. The missiles are supported by a chain of early warning radars, and surveillance and target acquisition radars with target tracking and missile control radars in the Moscow area.

3. In addition, the Soviet Union has the world's only deployed anti-satellite (ASAT) system, a space-based orbital interceptor of limited capability. Although operational since the early 1970s the system has been tested on various occasions, not always successfully, and not since 1982.

Soviet Research Programme

4. An examination of Soviet research programmes indicates that mature research programmes are under way in most of the fields—directed energy weapons, heavy lift space capability, pointing and tracking, surveillance and target detection—which could contribute to a defence capability against ballistic missiles.

a. Lasers. The Soviet Union has an extensive R&D programme underway on high energy lasers which dates from the mid 1960s, is carried out at over half a dozen major R&D facilities, and employs more than 10,000 scientists and engineers. It includes research into three types of gas lasers, the gas dynamic laser, the electric discharge laser and the chemical laser, and also other types including the excimer and free electron laser. Development of high energy lasers could include those intended for close-range defence of ships at sea, defence of high-value strategic targets in the Soviet Union and for air defence of theatre forces. An airborne laser has also been tested which could have ASAT or air defence applications, and the testing of a ground based laser which could be a prototype ASAT weapon has taken place.

b. Particle Beam and Radio Frequency Weapons. There is a vigorous R&D programme into particle beam weapons which could lead to a protype space based system by the late 1990s. Research into radio frequency weapons is also taking place. These have the potential to interfere with components of missiles, satellites or re-entry vehicles. Testing of ground based radio frequency weapons capable of damaging satellites could take place in the mid 1990s.

c. Kinetic Energy Weapons use as a kill mechanism the high speed collision of a small mass with the target. The Soviet Union has a number of longstanding research programmes in this field including research and development of electromagnetic railguns to accelerate projectiles to extra high velocities. There is however no evidence of work on space based systems.

d. Surveillance and Target Detection. The Soviet Union possesses a launch detection system based on a satellite borne infra-red sensor in a highly elliptic orbit. It covers US inter-continental ballistic missile launches but in its present form is not capable of detecting submarine launched ballistic missile launches. An experimental geostationary satellite aimed at improving the performance of the current system has been launched and there is a strong research programme to improve capabilities in this field.

e. Pointing and Tracking. Any effective defensive system against ballistic missiles would require pointing and tracking accuracies of the order of 1 metre at ranges of 1,000km to achieve high enough energy densities. Research is continuing in this field associated with the Soviet space programme but major advances would be necessary to provide the Soviet Union with adequate capabilities for weapons systems.

f. Space Capability. All the space borne elements of a ballistic missile defence system will require adequate facilities for their launch. The Soviet Union has eight space launch systems which are used to place objects in orbit and are developing two more, a medium lift launch vehicle and a heavy lift launch vehicle. They are also developing an equivalent to the US Shuttle. The new heavy lift vehicle should be able to lift as much as 150 tonnes into low earth orbit, adequate to launch the components needed for a large manned space complex or elements of space based weapons systems. With their manned space programmes they are also acquiring experience or maintaining complex platforms in space.

g. Command and Control. The most serious deficiency in Soviet capability is in the electronic systems required to manage the operations involved in detecting, tracking and recording all the missile movements covered by a ballistic missile defence system.

The Soviet Response to SDI

5. The Soviet propaganda response to SDI has been outright condemnation, on the grounds that such a system would be destabilising, but it has also accepted that it would have to counter it in some manner. In the most authoritative statement so far Minister of Defence, Marshal Sokolov, on 4 May 1985 said that the Soviet Union would have no choice but to take 'countermeasures' if the United States started to undermine the "existing strategic-military equilibrium" by deploying weapons in space. He also acknowledged that the Soviet Union had a military space research programme but said that this was only for perfecting space early warning, reconnaissance, communication and navigation systems.

6. Marshal Akhromeyev, Soviet Chief of the General Staff and General Chervov, a leading arms control spokesman, have subsequently elaborated on Sokolov's statements. Akhromeyev said that the "limitation, still less the reduction, of nuclear arms is inconceivable in conditions of the militarisation of space". The Soviet Union would be "forced to build up its own strategic offensive forces, supplementing them by means of defence". Chervov added more detail in a Press interview, suggesting that Soviet efforts will not attempt to match the United States space based SDI programme—"we will not ape the United States in spending billions on space systems"—but will seek a lower cost solution.

7. An account of the United States and Soviet positions on ballistic missile defence in relation to the current Geneva arms control talks can be found in the FCO/MOD Defence and Disarmament leaflets Nos. 16 and 17.

Conclusions

8. Despite its criticism of the United States SDI programme the Soviet Union has long standing research programmes examining new technologies with weapons potential which are generally relevant to ballistic missile defence. The future size and shape of Soviet ballistic missile defence is impossible to predict but current research and development programmes provide capabilities to develop SDI type systems if required.

SkyNet Satellite System

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the cost of each satellite in the SkyNet satellite system; and from which service Vote it will come.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The cost of each satellite in the current SkyNet programme is approximately £45 million at today's prices. The cost will fall on defence Vote 2.

RAF Policing Policy

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he has any plans to review RAF policing policy with respect to charging and detaining RAF personnel.

Mr. Stanley: There are no present plans to review RAF policy on these matters. I cannot, of course, anticipate the outcome of the inquiry being carried out by Mr. David Calcutt QC which I announced in my statement on 29 October.

Colombia (Rescue Operations)

Mr. Beith asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether there were any delays in RAF flights to Colombia to assist in rescue operations as a result of difficulties in negotiating overflying rights; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: I will answer shortly.

Overseas Defence Contracts

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Defence what measures he proposes to take to assist British manufacturers in winning defence contracts overseas.

Mr. Heseltine: The Government continue to provide strong support for the sale of British defence equipment overseas wherever this is compatible with our wider political and security interests.

TRANSPORT

London Docklands Light Railway

Mr. Neil Thorne asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether there are any plans to extend the London docklands light railway; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: London Regional Transport has today with my consent presented a Bill to provide powers to extend to the City the docklands light railway, now under construction. This extension would link the railway to LTR's Bank underground station. The extension would be mostly below ground.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment and I have been considering ways to involve the private sector in ownership and operation of the docklands light railway. The consortium which plans to develop Canary wharf on the Isle of Dogs and which comprises companies associated with and backed by Credit Suisse First Boston, Morgan Stanley International and First Boston International has told me that it regards the extension to the Bank as essential for its project. An understanding has now been reached with it that it will contribute £30 million towards the construction of the extension and, unless others come forward, secure underwriting of an agreed privatisation scheme. My right hon. Friend and I have endorsed this understanding. The consortium is bearing LRT's costs in the Bill.

There will be opportunity for other people who are interested in owning and operating the extended railway to put forward alternatives to the consortium's proposals.

The railway, at present under construction, is being financed by the Government through London Regional Transport and the London Docklands Development Corporation at a capital cost of £77 million. The prime purpose is to facilitate the development of docklands. It is not expected to generate a financial return on the capital invested and the Government therefore intend to offer it to any appropriate person who is prepared to construct the City extension, on terms that the Government retain a shareholding representing its investment, which will be remunerated if profits from the combined railway reach a sufficient level. The railway will revert to the ownership of LRT if, for any reason, the City extension fails to be completed.

The arrangements that I have described represent a sufficient understanding for the Bill to be deposited by the date specified by the Standing Orders. They are subject to final agreement between LRT and the consortium on the detailed design and costs of the City extension, and on the particulars of the privatisation scheme, and to the completion of a master building agreement between the consortium and the LDDC on the Canary wharf development, as well as to the consent of Parliament to the Bill.

Work will now proceed to settle the detailed design and forecast costs of the Bank extension before Second Reading of the Bill. Meanwhile, I am delightd that there is now a real prospect for the successful involvement of the private sector in a major piece of rail infrastructure in our capital city.

ENERGY

British Gas

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the total share of the energy market which British Gas has had in each of the last five years compared with that of North sea oil, the National Coal Board and the Central Electricity Generating Board.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: The percentage shares of United Kingdom final consumption of fuels and electricity covered by sales of gas by the British Gas Corporation and by electricity supplied by the Central Electricity Generating Board for the latest five complete years are as follows:

Percent	1984	1983	1982	1981	1980
British Gas Corporation	30	29	29	28	28
Central Electricity Generating Board*	11	11	11	11	11

* Direct sales or via Area Boards. The figures include a small element of estimation.

The corresponding contributions to final consumption of fuels and electricity from coal supplied by the National Coal Board and from United Kingdom North sea oil are not available on a comparable basis. Large quantities of NCB coal do not enter final consumption, but are used with imported coal for electricity generation and for the production of coke and other manufactured solid fuels. Similarly imported oils are used with United Kingdom North sea crude oil in refineries to manufacture products for inland consumption. In both cases it is not possible to identify separately the contributions made by the imported and home supply to the products finally consumed.

Electricity Boards (Appliance Repairs)

Mr. Fallon asked the Secretary of State for Energy whether he will make a statement on area electricity boards' appliance repair activities.

Mr. Goodlad: As I told the House on 25 July, at column 700, in the light of comments by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission in its report on the South Wales electricity board, I have been discussing with the Electricity Council whether it might be appropriate for area boards to adopt any new accounting arrangements for the repair business. The council has now decided that from 1985-86 boards will publish in their annual accounts four key indicators of performance in this activity: figures for turnover, operating profit or loss, average net current cost capital employed and the percentage return on that capital. The council has also indicated that boards will aim to run this business on a profitable basis.

This measure usefully complements the arrangements for appliance retailing and electrical contracting which were announced by my right hon. Friend last year on 26 July 1984, at column 757. The Government welcome the contribution that this new step will make towards improving boards' accountability and demonstrating that they are trading fairly in the ancillary activities which they pursue.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Parkhurst Prison

Mr. Stephen Ross asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many habitable cells are to be provided in C wing at Parkhurst prison; and if it is intended to keep any cells unoccupied on a permanent basis.

Mr. Mellor: The work currently being undertaken in C wing at Parkhurst will produce a total of 100 cells, of which 59 will be in the therapeutic unit and 41 in the adjoining rule 43 unit. All the accommodation in the rule 43 unit is expected to permanently occupied. The population of the therapeutic unit will be restricted initially to 30, probably rising in due course to about 35, which is considered to be the right size for a unit of this kind, having regard to the type of inmate to be held there. The additional space and flexibility will play an important part in the management of the therapeutic unit.

Parole

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners were released on parole licence in 1984; and what percentage of those were recalled.

Mr. Mellor: I regret the information is not available in the form requested. The number of inmates granted parole in 1984 was 11,886. The number of licences revoked in the same year was 512, but a proportion of these will have been in cases where a prisoner was released on licence before 1984.

Immigration (Photographic Records)

Mr. Nicholas Baker asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce photographic records of each person entering the United Kingdom.

Mr. Waddington: Photographs are not taken of persons entering the United Kingdom, and we have no plans to introduce such an arrangement.

Shops Bill

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received on the terms of the Shops Bill [Lords] from individuals and organisations; if he will indicate which of those were opposed to the Bill; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: Few representations have been received as yet which relate specifically to the terms of the Shops Bill, but we have received much correspondence from organisations and individuals on Sunday trading, most of it including arguments against the complete abolition of statutory restrictions.

BBC (Engineering Services)

Mr. Ron Davies: asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has discussed the future of the British Broadcasting corporation's engineering services with the director-general.

Mr. Giles Shaw: No. The management of its engineering services is entirely a matter for the corporation.

Hijackers (Asylum)

Mr. Dicks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the two hijackers Yassil Membar and Mohammed Tahir Ahmed who brought an aeroplane to Stansted in 1983 and have now been released from prison have been allowed to remain in the United Kingdom; whether they will be allowed to draw social security benefits; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: We have refused applications for asylum made by Mr. Membar and Mr. Ahmed, but decided that to return them to Tanzania against their will would be inconsistent with undertakings given to them at the time to the hijacking. These undertakings were confirmed in writing on 29 April, 1982 after the hijack was over to my hon. Friend the Member for Beverley (Sir P. Wall). They have accordingly been given exceptional leave to remain in the United Kingdom for 12 months. Eligibility for social security benefits is a matter for my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Social Services.

Mr. Glenn Pearson

Mr. Leigh asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department in which institution Mr. Glenn Pearson of Hansard cresent, Caister, Lancashire, has been placed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: On 19 November, at Lincoln Crown court, Glenn Pearson was found unfit to plead, under the Criminal Procedure (Insanity) Act 1964, to a charge of burglary. On 26 November the same court directed his admission to Harmston Hall hospital as a place of safety, under schedule 1 to the Act, pending the Home Secretary's direction under section 5 on his longer term hospital placement.

Miss Elizabeth Keays (Burglary)

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department why the Minister of State, the hon. Member for Pudsey (Mr. Shaw), has been unable to reply to the letter sent by the hon. Member for Linlithgow, of 14 October, acknowledged on 28 October, about the statements attributed to a detective sergeant of the Metropolitan police, asserting that a news blackout had been imposed by 10 Downing street on the burglary in November 1983 of the flat of Elizabeth Keays.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The hon. Member will now have received the letter to him from my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister in reply to his letter of 14 October, and I have nothing to add to that.

Community Radio

Mr. Nicholas Baker asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications have been received for the experimental community radio licences; and if he will make available the names and addresses of the applicants.

Mr. Hurd: Preliminary scrutiny of the applications received by the closing date of 31 October has shown there to be a total of 266 applications for the 21 experimental licences (some for more than one licence), as follows:

	Number of applications
Small neighbourhood stations in
Aylesbury	5
Calderdale	2
Dumfries	2
Cambridge	4
Colchester	5
Lincoln	6
London (three stations)	83
Penzance	3
Purbeck	2
Solihull	9
Rhondda	1
Rutland	3
Sunderland	3
Wirral	6
Large neighbourhood stations in
North West Wales	11
Shetland islands	2
Community of interest stations in
Greater Manchester	16
North London	69
South London	34
Total	266

I have placed in the Library a full list of the names and addresses of the contacts specified on each application form. Copies of, or extracts from, the list are being made available on request, to the press and other interested parties.

The advisory panel on community radio, which will advise on selection of the successful applicants, is now considering the applications. The panel hopes to be able to make recommendations to me in January.

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Shopping Centre Investment

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the hon. Member for Wokingham, as representing the Church Commissioners, if he will detail the exact investment by the Church Commissioners' asset committee in the new shopping centres in St. Enoch, Glasgow, Ipswich and Gateshead; if he will give the names of any principal shopping chain that might be participating in that investment; and if he will make a statement.

Sir William van Straubenzee: The commissioners' total investment in the three shopping centres is likely to be in the order of £120 million. Sears Holdings is to participate in the development of the centre at St. Enoch's, Glasgow.

ENVIRONMENT

Planning Laws

Mr. Holt asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any proposals to alter current planning laws.

Mr. Tracey: The Gracious Speech from the Throne announced the intention to introduce measures to improve the planning system. The main matters to be included were noted in paragraphs 3.6(i) and (v) and 3.7 of the White Paper, "Lifting the Burden", (Cmnd. 9571), published on 16 July.

Co-operative Promotion Allowance

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will increase the £2,100 per scheme co-operative promotion allowance.

Mr. John Patten: The level of co-operative promotion allowance for 1986-87 is currently being considered as part of the annual review of all housing association grant allowances. The current rates are £2,135 per scheme for projects in the provinces and £3,522 per scheme in London. The rates to take effect from 1 April 1986 will be promulgated early in 1986.

Refuse Collection

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will seek to amend section 72 of the Public Health Act 1936 to increase the compensation which householders may apply for when a local authority is in default of its statutory obligation to collect household refuse; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: No. This would not be appropriate at a time when we are considering the bringing into force of the provisions of sections 12 to 14 of the Control of Pollution Act 1974. When these provisions have been brought into force they will replace the corresponding ones of the Public Health Act 1936, and a remedy for default by a local authority will be available under section 97.

Water Supplies (Yorkshire and Humberside)

Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of the water supply in the Yorkshire and Humberside region can be described as falling below the standard laid down by the European Economic Community.

Mr. John Patten: About one third of the water supplied by the Yorkshire water authority falls below the standard laid down in the EC drinking water directive. This proportion will be substantially reduced in the next few years. A further 12 per cent. is softened at times below the minimum specified in the directive to ensure compatibility with naturally soft water from Pennine sources. Information is not available for the Yorkshire and Humberside region, as the economic region and the water authority areas differ.

Southgate Housing Estate, Runcorn

Mr. Allan Roberts asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions have taken place between his Department and the Warrington and Runcorn development corporation concerning the possible sale of the Southgate housing estate to a private developer; and whether he is satisfied that the residents of the estate have been adequately informed and consulted about the proposals.

Mr. Tracey: Officials of my Department have had preliminary discussions with officers of the Warrington and Runcorn development corporation about proposals to transfer ownership of the Southgate housing estate at Runcorn to a permanent landlord body, and to secure private finance for major improvements. Tenants had advance notice of the issue of a disposal prospectus earlier this year. Public meetings have bee held by the corporation to keep tenants informed of progress. Two offers have been received and these are now being considered and discussed with the prospective purchasers. When there is a firm proposal, tenants will be fully consulted. My right hon. Friend will not accept any proposal which does not include substantial protection of the tenants' existing rights.

Local Authority Property Sales

Mr. Allan Roberts asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has about cases in which local authorities have planned to dispose of rundown blocks of flats or estates to private developers after arranging alternative accommodation for any remaining tenants and in which problems have arisen in connection with (a) the power to make home loss payments and (b) the power to gain possession of the dwellings.

Sir George Young: During informal discussions and formal consultations on the proposed new ground for possession, representations were made by various local authorities about general difficulties in obtaining possession when the properties were to be sold for redevelopment, in the absence of specific powers to obtain possession and to make home loss payments. Specific examples of difficulties in obtaining possession or paying home loss payments have been put to the Department by the following local authorities:

Langbaurgh council
Oldham borough council
Wandsworth borough council
South Tyneside borough council
Solihull borough council
City of Westminster
Burnley council

Smith-built Properties (Report)

Miss Boothroyd asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make available the report by the Building Research Establishment following the examination of some Smith-built properties in the constituency of the hon. Member for West Bromwich, West.

Mr. John Patten: As I indicated in my reply to the hon. Lady of 12 November, at column 119, I hope to make an announcement shortly on the question of designation of Smith houses under the Housing Defects Act. I propose to make the Building Research Establishment's report on Smith houses in West Bromwich available at the time of that announcement.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Spina Bifida

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what evidence he has on the efficacy of vitamin supplementation in the prevention of spina bifida.

Mr. Walden: I refer the right hon. Member to my reply of 25 November, at column 399, to questions from the hon. Member for Crewe and Nantwich (Mrs. Dunwoody).

SCOTLAND

Disabled People (Aids)

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what other research into the areas for further study in chapter 6.1 of the working party report on prostheses, ortheses and aids for the disabled which he published in 1983 has taken place; and if he will state the outcome.

Mr. John MacKay: The areas of study referred to in the report relate predominantly to matters of local service. There is no central record of any research which may have been carried out into these matters by health boards or by local authorities.

The committee for research and equipment for the disabled of the Chief Scientist's Office, Scottish Home and Health Department, is undertaking a major survey of aids and equipment for the disabled which will provide some indirect information on numbers of disabled.

Prosthetic and Orthotic Services

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many rehabilitation engineering centres of prosthetic aids exist in Scotland; and how many others are planned.

Mr. John MacKay: The only centre in Scotland of which I am aware is the Tayside rehabilitation engineering service, Dundee. It is for health boards to decide whether they wish to set up such units.

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what programmes exist to evaluate United Kingdom-produced orthotic and prosthetic aids.

Mr. John MacKay: All orthotic and prosthetic aids supplied through the National Health Service are assessed for safety and reliability by the scientific and technical branch of the Department of Health and Social Security. In addition, the Scottish Home and Health Department committee for research on equipment for the disabled awards grants to Scottish projects designed to develop and/or evaluate prosthetic or orthotic devices.

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he proposes to link the prosthetic and orthotic services.

Mr. John MacKay: Prosthetic and orthotic services are provided by health boards. It is for them to take decisions on whether it would be appropriate for the services to be linked in their areas. This has been largely achieved in the Tayside health board area.

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland to what extent orthopaedic units are associated with hospital-based orthotic units in Scotland.

Mr. John MacKay: Fourteen of the 15 hospital-based orthotics units in Scotland are associated with orthopaedic units. The exception is the orthotics unit at the Gilbert Bain hospital, Lerwick.

Licensing (Scotland) Act 1976

Mr. Hill asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys' survey of the effect of the Licensing (Scotland) Act 1976 is to be published.

Mr. John MacKay: My right hon. Friend expects that the results of the survey will be published in February 1986.

Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons (Scotland) Act

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what action his Department has taken over the past year to seek to ensure that local authorities are fulfilling their duties under the Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons (Scotland) Act.

Mr. John MacKay: It is for local authorities themselves to decide how to discharge their responsibilities under the Act subject to any general guidance which my right hon. Friend may provide. I have no reason to think that they are failing to meet the needs which they have identified in their areas.

Wren Skyships

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how much venture capital has been raised from the Scottish Development Agency for Wren Skyships.

Mr. Allan Stewart: No venture capital has been raised from the agency.

Mergansers and Goosanders

Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what evidence he has that mergansers and goosanders cause serious damage to fishing.

Mr. John MacKay: The Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland published a paper in 1962 in the freshwater and salmon fisheries research series entitled "The Goosander and Red-Breasted Merganser as Predators of Salmon in Scottish Waters". In this publication the effects of those species on Atlantic salmon in Scotland were assessed and it was concluded that these species are, in some circumstances, harmful to trout and young salmon in freshwater. In considering applications for licences to shoot these birds, my Department takes account of the evidence provided by applicants as to the extent of damage to the fisheries.

Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what consideration is given to the views of conservationist organisations on the protection of species before licences are granted to permit the shooting of goosanders and mergansers; and how many of these species were shot in 1984.

Mr. John MacKay: As required by the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981, my right hon. Friend consults the Nature Conservancy Council from time to time as to the circumstances in which licences should be granted to permit the shooting of goosanders and mergansers for the purpose of preventing serious damage to fisheries. The advice of the council is fully considered before policy decisions are taken.

The numbers of goosanders and mergansers reported shot in 1984 under licences granted by the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland were 514 and 516, respectively.

DEFENCE

Mhari-L

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will arrange for the wreck of the Mhari-L to be raised.

Mr. Norman Lamont: No. My Department has no responsibility for the removal of wrecks.

Nuclear Tests (South Pacific)

Mr. Harrison asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many civilian personnel were involved in the nine nuclear weapon tests near Christmas Island in the South Pacific; what records have been kept regarding their health standards since; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: About 1,000 civilian personnel were involved in the atmospheric test programme near Christmas Island. Most of them were employed by the Atomic Weapons Research Establishment, Aldermaston. No special records have been kept regarding their health standards since in addition to normal employee medical records. Their details are being made available to the National Radiological Protection Board, for the board to consider them for inclusion in its study.

Mr. Harrison asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make available to right hon. and hon. Members the reports of the studies carried out on the test veterans involved in the nuclear weapon tests on Christmas Island; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The National Radiological Protection Board is carrying out a study of the participants in the United Kingdom atmospheric nuclear weapon test programmes, including the tests in Australia and those near Christmas Island. The study is not expected to be completed until October 1986. It is intended that the findings will be made generally available.

Mr. Harrison asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many military personnel were involved in the nine nuclear weapon tests near Christmas Island, in the South Pacific, what records have been kept regarding their health standards since; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Over 20,000 service personnel were involved in the entire British atmospheric nuclear weapon test programme, including 12 tests in Australia and or near Christmas Island. No special records have been kept regarding their health standards since in addition to normal service medical records. Their details are being made available to the National Radiological Protection Board. for the board to consider them for inclusion in its study.

Falkland Islands

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Defence what percentage of sheep carcases brought into service kitchens in the Falklands has been declared unfit for human consumption.

Mr. Norman Lamont: None, but some carcases (under 5 per cent.) are rejected at the abattoir.

Royal Naval Establishment, Bath

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he has any plans to relocate the Royal Naval establishment in Bath to the Royal Marines barracks at Eastney, Portsmouth.

Mr. Norman Lamont: No.

Civilian Personnel (Relocation)

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many civilian personnel will be affected by the relocation of service establishments from the south to the north.

Mr. Norman Lamont: As yet it has not been determined which service establishments might be relocated from the south to the north. This is a matter for review as opportunities arise, such as when major investment is required, but all proposals will need to stand on their economic and operational merits. Only when specific cases are considered will it be possible to assess the numbers of civilians to be affected.

Royal Marines Barracks, Portsmouth

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the future of the Royal Marines barracks, Portsmouth.

Mr. Norman Lamont: My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Defence Procurement, announced on 21 June 1985, at column 248, that it was envisaged that the major part of the Royal Marines barracks, Eastney, would close, subject to further study and to the outcome of consultation. This study and consultation are continuing, and an announcement will be made as soon as possible.

Scientists and Technicians (Pay)

Mr. Warren asked the Secretary of State for Defence which grades of scientists and technicians at the Atomic Weapons Research Establishment and the royal ordnance factory at Burghfield have received pay increases of up to 26 per cent.; what were the costs involved; whether there have been any consequent difficulties regarding differentials with other grades of staff; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Special pay additions (SPAs) have been introduced at the Atomic Weapons Research Establishment, Aldermaston, and the nearby royal ordnance factory at Burghfield in order to alleviate manning shortages in certain categories. The SPAs are payable from 1 October 1985 to engineers between the grades of professional and technology officer IV and professional and technology officers I, and to scientists between the grades of assistant scientific officer and senior scientific officer. The amounts range between £1,000 and £2,000 a year depending upon grade. The cost in a full year will be some £3 million. Other staff at these establishments have sought similar treatment.

Bases and Facilities

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will list the location by parliamentary constituency of (a) all United States non-nuclear bases in the United Kingdom and (b) all United Kingdom non-nuclear bases in the United Kingdom;

(2) if he will list the location by parliamentary constituency of (a) all Royal Air Force facilities in the United Kingdom and (b) all United States bases and facilities in the United Kingdom;

(3) if he will list the location by parliamentary constituency of (a) all royal ordnance factories, (b) all royal dockyards and (c) all Ministry of Defence facilities, itemising them also;

(4) if he will list the location by parliamentary constituency of (a) all Army barracks and (b) all Royal Navy bases in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to his reply, 19 November 1985, c. 199]: The following bases and facilities have been made available for use by United States forces in the United Kingdom. It is a longstanding convention of this and previous Governments not to confirm or deny the presence of nuclear weapons at any location; accordingly, the role of bases and facilities are not specified in this respect.

THE ARTS

Museums

Mr. Wrigglesworth asked the Minister for the Arts if he has any plans to change the status of any museums from local to national as a result of the abolition of the metropolitan county councils.

Mr. Luce: The Government's plans for the future funding of major museums and art galleries affected by the abolition of the metropolitan county councils were outlined in their reply of 31 July 1984 (a copy of which is in the Library of the House) to the first report of the Select Committee on Education, Science and the Arts, 1983-84 Session.

A trustee body is to be established by Order in Council under section 46 of the Local Government Act 1985, to take over responsibility for the bulk of the museum and art gallery service hitherto maintained by Merseyside county council, and will be centrally funded directly by the Office of Arts and Libraries. The only other museum to be centrally funded directly by the OAL is the Greater Manchester museum of science and industry, already constituted as an independent charitable trust. The arrangements for other major museums and galleries will be as set out in the reply of 31 July 1984. Responsibility for institutions not listed therein will pass to the appropriate successor local authorities.

Arts Council (Supply Estimates)

Mr. Lawrence asked the Minister for the Arts if there has been any change in the Arts Council's expected commitment figures for 1985-86 as shown at page 24 of the class V volume of the Supply Estimates.

Mr. Luce: When the Supply Estimates were published in March 1985 a provisional table was included. The corrected figures are shown. The total of the grant-in-aid is not affected by the correction.

WALES

Mentally Handicapped Children

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what procedure exists to ensure that when local service departments of local authorities in England place mentally handicapped children into private residential accommodation in Wales there is adequate co-ordination between those authorities and the social service departments in the area in which the accommodation is located; and who is responsible for monitoring standards of care;

(2) if he is satisfied with the operation of the statutory provisions to enable private residential houses for mentally handicapped children in Wales to be inspected for standards of care on a regular basis;

(3) if he is satisfied that proper procedures exist to ensure that local social service departments and district health authorities in Wales co-operate so that social services follow up any complaints made by health authorities concerning children at risk in private residential homes for mentally handicapped children.

Mr. Mark Robinson: Private residential establishments providing for four or more mentally handicapped children are subject to the registration and inspection arrangements arising from the Registered Homes Act 1984. Such establishments have to be registered with the appropriate county council's social services department and must be inspected by it at least once a year. The primary responsibility for children in care rests with the placing authority. Liaison arrangements between social services authorities and others will vary according to individual circumstances.

Housing Defects Act

Mr. Gwilym Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any plans to increase the present expenditure limit of £14,000 under the Housing Defects Act; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Not at present. But we are monitoring the costs of reinstating dwellings under the Act and would be prepared to prescribe a new limit or limits should it prove necessary.

Library Adviser

Mr. Abse asked the Secretary of State for Wales what arrangements have been made to provide professional advice to the Welsh Office on library and information matters in order to assist him to discharge his obligations under the Public Libraries and Museums Act 1964 following the termination of advisory services from the Office of Arts and Libraries.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The Department's senior librarian will provide this professional support from 1 April 1986. The arrangements will be reviewed after a year.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

English Wine

Mr. Yeo asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much English wine was purchased during the last year by his Department for use in the United Kingdom and by British embassies abroad.

Mr. Eggar: Thirty dozen bottles of English wine were purchased by the Government hospitality fund in February last year and a further 30 dozen in November this year. These wines are served at official functions hosted by Her Majesty's Ministers.

Diplomatic missions overseas do not maintain official wine cellars. Wines are selected and stocked by individual officers. We do not have records of what wines are stocked.

Athens Airport

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make further representations to the Greek Government regarding the security aspects at Athens airport; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: We have been in touch with the Greek authorities on a regular basis over security at Athens airport and earlier this year offered them assistance in improving security. We will continue to keep in close touch, but note that a number of inspections in recent weeks have confirmed that security measures at the airport conform to the internationally recognised standards set down in annex 17 of the Chicago convention.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Ethiopian Tinned Meat

Mr. Onslow asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will seek to suspend the import of Ethiopian tinned meat into the United Kingdom and other European Community countries until such time as the Ethiopian Government can show that no grain fit for human consumption is being used to fatten cattle for export from that country.

Mrs. Fenner [pursuant to her reply, 25 November 1985, c. 364]: No. The only justification for banning imports of tinned meat from a country is that they would constitute a risk to public health or animal health. Imports from Ethiopia are currently prevented on these grounds.

The checks to ensure that grain given as food aid reaches the people it is intended for are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Minister for Overseas Development.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons (Northern Ireland) Act 1978

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what action his Department has taken over the past year to seek to ensure that local authorities are fulfilling their duties under the Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons (Northern Ireland) Act 1978.

Mr. Needham: I am content that local bodies which have functions under the Act are aware of their responsibilities and of the need to take them into account in formulating priorities.

Air Rifle Clubs

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) if he will list all registered air rifle clubs in Northern Ireland, detailing when they received their certificates of authorisation, the location of their approved ranges or proposed ranges and the number of club members;

(2) if he will list all those registered air rifle clubs which submitted their rifles for safe keeping to the Royal Ulster Constabulary at any stage in the past 17 years, indicating (a) whether the rifles were submitted voluntarily, (b) when they were submitted, (c) when they were returned, (d) whether licence fees were paid in respect of the rifles while in Royal Ulster Constabularly keeping and (e) when those rifles not yet returned will be returned;

(3) if he will list those air rifle clubs, or proposed clubs, which have had applications for certificates of authorisation refused at any stage in the past 16 years, indicating whether and when such refusals were ever revoked.

Mr. Scott: I shall reply to the hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Manufacturing Industry

13. Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on Government policy on manufacturing industry in the light of the findings of the House of Lords Select Committee on Overseas Trade.

Mr. Channon: The Government's policy is to create a climate in which the wealth-creating sector of the economy, including manufacturing industry, can flourish.

21. Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how the level of investment in manufacturing industry has varied since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Pattie: In 1984, capital investment in manufacturing was nearly £6·4 billion at 1980 prices; 16 per cent. above the trough in the last investment cycle downswing which started in 1980. The latest available estimates for all the years since 1979 will be published in the Official Report.

*Capital Investment in United Kingdom Manufacturing Industry
£ million at 1980 prices

Year
1979	8,230
1980	7,314
1981	5,698
1982	5,516
1983	5,557
1984	6,372

* Divisions 2-4 of the Standard Industrial Classification (Revised 1980), including assets leased to manufacturers from the financial industries.

32. Mr. Nicholls asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what were the figures for manufacturing output and investment in 1984; and how this compares with the year before.

Mr. Pattie: In 1984 the index of manufacturing output rose by nearly 4 per cent. to 100·6 (1980=100)—the largest percentage increase in any year since 1973—and manufacturing investment (including assets leased from financial institutions) increased by nearly 15 per cent. to £6·4 billion (in 1980 prices).

36. Mr. Knox asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the most recent figure for output in manufacturing industry; and how this compares with the figure for the same month six years ago.

Mr. Pattie: For the third quarter of 1985 the index of production for manufacturing industry is 103, based on 1980 equal to 100. This is 5 per cent. lower than the corresponding index for the third quarter of 1979.

54. Mr. Nicholas Baker asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received about unfair competition to British manufacturing companies from companies receiving special assistance.

Mr. Pattie: The information requested is not readily available and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Consumer Guarantees

19. Mr. Hirst asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations have been made to his Department about the Office of Fair Trading discussion paper on consumer guarantees; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: No representations have been made to my Department about the Office of Fair Trading discussion paper on this subject. I understand that the Director General of Fair Trading has had a number of such representations and that he proposes to publish his final report on consumer guarantees early in the new year.

Legal Advice Centres

20. Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on his Department's future plans for the funding of legal advice centres within the framework of citizens advice bureaux.

Mr. Howard: My Department has no plans for such funding.

Iraq

Mr. Fallon asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on trading prospects with Iraq.

Mr. Channon: In the first nine months of this year United Kingdom exports to Iraq totalled £340 million, an increase of 44 per cent. over the same period in 1984. I shall be seeking ways of strengthening bilateral trade in meetings this week with the Iraqi Minister of Trade.

Aid and Trade Provision

Mr. Richard Page asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what changes have been made in the aid and trade provision and administration.

Mr. Channon: I refer my hon. Friend to my right hon. and learned Friend's statement on 12 November in which he told the House that the Government were introducing a soft loan facility to enable the doubling by 1988-89 of the annual business that might be won through support under the aid and trade provision.

Multi-fibre Arrangement

Mr. Waller asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what account he will take of United States protectionism in establishing Her Majesty's Government's position towards the renewal of the multi-fibre arrangement.

Mr. Channon: Our policy will have to evolve to take account of the positions of the United States and other major participants as well as of our interest in reducing protectionist pressures in such countries.

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has now received the European Commission's proposals for a draft negotiating mandate for the multi-fibre arrangement renewal negotiations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Channon: The Commission has not yet made a communication to the Council on a draft negotiating mandate for the multi-fibre arrangement negotiations, but is expecting to do so soon.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what study he has made of tariff and non-tariff barriers to United Kingdom and European Community exports of textiles and clothing; and if he will seek to reduce these barriers during the negotiations for renewal of the multi-fibre arrangement.

Mr. Channon: In the forthcoming MFA negotiations and the proposed new GATT round we shall be seeking reductions in the considerable barriers which exist in a number of countries to the export of United Kingdom and European Community textiles and clothing.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what consultations he has held with the Governments of Spain and Portugal regarding the renewal of the multi-fibre arrangement.

Mr. Channon: I have not had recent bilateral exchanges with either Spain or Portugal about the renewal of the multi-fibre arrangement. Following the signature of their treaty of accession, Spain and Portugal have the right to attend as observers in all European Community meetings, including those discussing textile trade policy. From 1 January they will participate as full members of the European Community.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has regarding the approach of the United States' Administration towards renewal of the multi-fibre arrangement.

Mr. Channon: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what consultations he has held with the textile and clothing industries regarding the policy to be adopted for the multi-fibre arrangement renewal negotiations.

Mr. Channon: We consulted the representatives of the textile and clothing industry, as well as other interested parties, before the Government decided their overall approach to the multi-fibre arrangement which I announced to the House on 9 May. We have had further detailed discussions since then and I intend to keep in close touch with the industry and other interested parties as the negotiations progress.

Industrial Competitiveness

25. Dr. Mawhinney asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what change has taken place in the relative competitiveness of British industry since 1979; and what assessments he makes of the contribution to this of trade union legislation enacted in this period.

Mr. Pattie: Since 1979 productivity in manufacturing industry has increased by 22 per cent. By promoting responsible industrial relations and making trades unions more accountable to their members, the Government's industrial relations legislation has made a positive contribution to this improvement. Relative unit labour costs have, however, increased by 7 per cent. since 1979 indicating a need for continued wage restraint.

Industrial Investment

26. Mr. Hicks asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he is satisfied with the level of industrial investment in those parts of the United Kingdom having assisted area status; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: No. The assisted areas need investment if jobs are to be created there. The revised schemes of regional assistance will help to secure that investment and those jobs.

Retail Grocery

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will give the figures in each of the last 10 years for the percentage share of the retail grocery sector of (a) major multiples, (b) other multiples, (c) independent stores and (d) co-operatives.

Mr. Howard: The Business Statistics Office has conducted full retailing inquiries annually from 1976 to 1980, and bi-annually thereafter. Figures for co-operative societies are not readily available before 1980. They are as follows:

Shares of Retail Sales of Groceries and Provisions

Per cent

	*Multiple retailers with 100 or more outlets	*Other multiple retailers	*Single outlet retailers	Co-operative societies
1976	40	30	29	Figures
1977	44	30	25	not
1978	50	28	22	separately

Source: Retailing inquiries, Business Statistics Office.

Note: Market shares do not always sum to 100 as a result of rounding.

* Including co-operative societies from 1976 to (1980), excluding co-operative societies for 1980 and 1982.

Regional Policy

Mr. Douglas asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the effectiveness of the Government's regional policy.

Mr. Butcher: The changes in regional policy were introduced only a year ago and it is still too early to measure the effectiveness of the revised schemes of assistance.

Science and Technology

29. Mr. Brandon-Bravo asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the total expenditure of his Department on science and technology in 1984-85; and how this compares with the figure for 1979-80.

Mr. Butcher: Expenditure on scientific and technological assistance and on support for investment in innovation in 1984-85 was £416 million. This compares with £143 million in 1979-80.

Telecommunication Equipment

30. Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what support his Department provides for the export of telecommunications equipment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Pattie: We have lent considerable support to the efforts of UK companies to secure telecommunications equipment export orders. Aid and trade provision and other measures to counter support available to competitor companies abroad have been offered. Such support continues to be available to all UK companies for current and future export campaigns, as does the full backing and encouragement of Ministers and our representatives overseas. We are also giving our full support to international efforts to reduce the barriers to open trade in telecommunications, notably within the EC telecommunications initiative.

New Technology

31. Mr. Andy Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he is taking to encourage the use of new technology in industry.

Mr. Pattie: The Government's policies to create and maintain a business climate that encourages and rewards enterprise will stimulate improvements in industrial research and development and will help to encourage industry to develop and exploit new technology.

In addition, my Department offers a range of assistance under the Industrial Development Act 1982 and the Science and Technology Act 1965 to help suitable projects.

Gartcosh and Ravenscraig

33. Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received on the future of the Gartcosh and Ravenscraig steel plants; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: A number of representations from organisations and individuals in Scotland have been made to my Department. I have nothing to add to the replies my right hon. and learned Friend gave to the hon. Member for Strathkelvin and Bearsden (Mr. Hirst) on 23 October.

Greater Manchester

34. Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will indicate what initiatives he is taking to secure the future of manufacturing industry in Greater Manchester.

Mr. Butcher: Most of Greater Manchester has assisted area status and therefore benefits from regional assistance. I have no plans to alter these arrangements.

Soviet Union

35. Mr. Sackville asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on trading prospects with the Soviet Union.

42. Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on trading prospects with the Soviet Union.

Mr. Channon: During his visit to London in December 1984 Mr. Gorbachev spoke of a potential for an increase in trade turnover between the United Kingdom and the USSR of 40-50 per cent. in the next few years. I agree that the opportunities for United Kingdom firms to win increased business in the USSR are unusually good. I urge more companies to consider this market which, while difficult to enter initially, can be very rewarding. Her Majesty's Government will provide all possible support consistent with our international obligations.

Steel Industry

37. Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the present position in regard to the privatisation of the special steels division of the British Steel Corporation.

Mr. Butcher: British Steel Corporation and GKN have submitted the updated proposals to the Government, following the Government's agreement in principle to their proposals for a joint venture in engineering steels. My right hon. and learned Friend intends to make a statement in due course.

48. Mr. James Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he will next meet the chairman of the British Steel corporation to discuss the steel industry in Scotland.

Mr. Butcher: My right hon. and learned Friend has no specific plans for a meeting at present.

Research and Development

38. Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what proposals he has to stimulate improvements in industrial research and development.

Mr. Butcher: The Government's policies to create and maintain a business climate that encourages and rewards enterprise will stimulate improvements in industrial research and development and will help to encourage industry to develop and exploit new technology.

In addition, my Department offers a range of assistance under the Industrial Development Act 1982 and the Science and Technology Act 1965 to help suitable projects.

European Community

39. Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the total amount of exports of manufactured goods to the European Economic Community over the most recent 12 months for which figures are available; and what was the total of imports of manufactures from the European Economic Community in the same period.

Mr. Butcher: In the 12 months to September 1985, United Kingdom exports of manufactures to the European Community were £20,200 million and imports were £28,100 million (balance of payments basis).

41. Mr. Coombs asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement of progress on reducing the internal barriers to trade within the European Community.

Mr. Channon: Substantial progress in reducing a wide range of internal barriers to Community trade is recorded in the Luxembourg Presidency's report to the Council (document numbers 9171/85 and 9172/85). The Commission's White Paper entitled "Completing the Internal Market", of which the June European Council took favourable note, sets out its objectives for the removal of the remaining barriers. (A copy of these documents is available in the Library of the House.) The European Council agreed on the removal of remaining barriers by 1992 in priority areas including the removal of physical and technical barriers to the movement of goods. The October Internal Market Council endorsed arrangements for establishing a detailed programme for carrying this work forward in the next 15 months.

Allied Breweries (Elders' Bid)

40. Mr. Wainwright asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects to receive the report of the Office of Fair Trading on Elders' bid for Allied Breweries.

Mr. Howard: The Director General of Fair Trading will be advising me as soon as practicable.

Gainsborough

43. Mr. Leigh asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much money has been provided to the Gainsborough travel-to-work area under section 7 of the Industry Act 1972 since the passing of that Act.

Mr. Butcher: Offers made between 1 April 1972 and 30 September 1985 total £4·1 million.

Nissan Motor Plant

44. Mr. Hoyle asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any plans to visit the Nissan motor plant in the north-east of England; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans to visit the Nissan motor plant in the north-east of England at the present time. I understand that the project is on schedule for production to begin in 1986 as set out in the heads of agreement between Nissan and the Government.

Regional Assistance

45. Mr. Gerald Howarth asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many applications his Department has received for regional assistance from companies in the west midlands assisted area.

Mr. Butcher: Since the designation of intermediate area status on 29 November 1984 my Department has received 597 applications for regional selective assistance in the west midlands. By November 1985 a total of £22 million has been offered in grants, and this is associated with some 13,500 jobs either created or safeguarded.

Inward Investment

46. Mr. Merchant asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps his Department is taking to attract inward investment into the United Kingdom.

Mr. Channon: The Invest in Britain Bureau (IBB) within the Department of Trade and Industry is currently engaged in a major promotional campaign — "Britain Means Business"—in which it is collaborating with all the main British public sector inward investment promotional bodies and the private sector. The campaign, which is additional to the IBB's normal activities, aims to draw attention to the undoubted attractions of the United Kingdom for foreign investors, not leaast of which is the more favourable climate for business the Government have created.

International Tin Council

47. Mr. Tim Smith asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps the Government have taken to resolve the problems of the International Tin Council.

Mr. Channon: The Government have put forward specific proposals to the International Tin Council to deal effectively with the present situation. I raised the issue yesterday at the Foreign Affairs Council in Brussels, and we shall be continuing our efforts, within the Council and through diplomatic channels, to achieve an agreed early resolution.

Share Ownership

49. Mr. Andrew MacKay asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what impact his Department's privatisation programme has had on share ownership in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Pattie: The sales of shares in British Telecom, British Aerospace and Jaguar have made a major contribution to widening individual share ownership, which has roughly doubled as a result of this Government's privatisation programme.

Competition Policy

50. Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether Her Majesty's Government's competition policy distinguishes between monopolies in the private sector and monopolies in the public sector.

Mr. Howard: The Fair Trading Act 1973 provides for references to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission of monopolies by both the Secretary of State and by the Director General of Fair Trading (though the latter is excluded from making references in respect of certain goods and services, including some in the public sector). In addition, section 11 of the Competition Act 1980 provides for references by the Secretary of State of public bodies, including nationalised industries. Such references are directed primarily at efficiency, costs and service, but may include the possible abuse of a monopoly position.

In pursuing their programme of returning state-controlled industries to the private sector, the Government's policy is to establish where appropriate special regulatory regimes to prevent monopoly abuse and encourage efficiency.

Car Imports

51. Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent representations he has received concerning car imports into the United Kingdom.

Mr. Butcher: Representations particularly concerning car imports by the multinational manufacturers located in the United Kingdom have been made by my Department. Ministers and officials have had meetings with the major multinational manufacturers in the United Kingdom.

57. Mr. Roy Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will seek a meeting with the multinational motor manufacturers operating in Britain, concerning their large-scale importation of cars into the United Kingdom and the level of British content in the vehicles assembled here.

Mr. Channon: My ministerial colleagues and officials already have regular meetings with senior management of the multinational motor manufacturers operating in the United Kingdom to discuss these matters.

Secondary Schools (Mini-enterprises)

53. Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what his Department is doing to encourage the spread of mini-enterprises in secondary schools.

Mr. Butcher: I refer to my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State's reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Harrogate (Mr. Banks) on 11 November 1985 at column 48.

Company Receivership and Liquidations

55. Mr. Ron Brown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many United Kingdom companies were taken into receivership or liquidated during 1984; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: The number of company liquidations in the United Kingdom in 1984 was 14,327. Compulsory liquidations and creditors' voluntary liquidations are included. Nevertheless, the stock of UK businesses registered for VAT has risen in each of the last five years: in 1984 there were 177 thousand business starts compared with 140 thousand stops for all reasons.

Home Accident Surveillance System

56. Mrs. Roe asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he is satisfied with the effectiveness of the home accident surveillance system; and whether he has any plans to extend it further.

Mr. Howard: The home accident surveillance system has proved its effectiveness by providing the quantifiable information essential to my Department in its role of improving consumer safety. In addition it is used extensively by manufacturers and trade associations, by other Government Departments and by organisations such as the British Standards Institution, the Royal Society for the Prevention of Accidents and the Consumers' Association.

Its success has resulted in a European Commission proposal that a similar scheme be adopted throughout the Community. If approved this may result in an extension of the system to include sports, leisure and school accidents.

Insurance

58. Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent discussions he has had with representatives of the insurance companies and the insurance brokers; and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. Howard: I have, since taking office, met many people in the insurance industry, and in the course of these meetings have discussed a wide variety of matters.

Tin Industry

59. Mr. Harris asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received concerning the state of the tin industry in Cornwall.

Mr. Channon: I have received a number of representations from Members of Parliament, local authorities, commercial organisations and individuals, all of which are being carefully considered.

Whisky

60. Mr. Pollock asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has made to the Japanese Government about discriminatory trading terms for Scotch whisky in Japan; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Channon: Her Majesty's Government, and most recently my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland, have firmly expressed our concern about the difficulties in Japan facing Scotch whisky exporters. The European Commissioners who visited Tokyo last week also took up the issue.

Postal Services

61. Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he last met the chairman of the Post Office to discuss the effectiveness of postal services.

Mr. Pattie: I meet the chairman from time to time to discuss matters of current interest and these would normally include the Post Office's plans to improve postal performance. I last met the chairman on 24 October.

Copyright Protection

Mr. Lilley asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when Her Majesty's Government intend to make legislative proposals on the matters covered in the 1981 Green Paper, "Reform of the Law Relating to Coyright, Designs and Performers' Protection," Cmnd. 8302.

Mr. Butcher We are currently preparing a White Paper which will set out the Government's proposals to amend the law on copyright, designs and performers' protection. I anticipate publication early in the new year.

BL (Bathgate)

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on his discussions with British Leyland on the future of the British Leyland factory at Bathgate.

Mr. Butcher: The closure of Bathgate was proposed by the BL board in its 1984 corporate plan which was discussed in detail between the Department of Trade and Industry and BL. Discussions about possible future use of the facility are continuing locally and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland is keeping in close touch with BL and has made it clear that he stands ready to help any viable proposition.

Leather Footwear

Mr. Freeman asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the value of leather footwear exports for the last 12 months of available statistics.

Mr. Channon: Leather footwear to the value of £111·6 million was exported in the 12 months to September 1985.

Scales and Weighing Machines

Sir Eldon Griffiths asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish in the Official Report the planned timetable for implementation of the Eden working party's recommendations on revised pattern approval procedures and self-verification, as outlined to the recent conference of the Federation of Scale and Weighing Machine Manufacturers.

Mr. Michael Howard [pursuant to his reply, 25 November 1985, c. 406]: Action is already being taken on those Eden committee recommendations relating to pattern approval and it is intended to complete implementation of revised procedures by October 1986. The public consultation period on the Eden report will close on 30 November 1985 and the Government hope to announce their timetable for implementation by mid-1986. Any primary legislation will be introduced at the earliest opportunity.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Systime plc

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has examined complaints into the alleged detention and threatening of staff at Systime plc during a visit by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise in July 1984; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke [pursuant to his reply, 26 November 1985]: Officers from the investigation division of Her Majesty's Customs and Excise visited the offices of Systime plc in July 1984. The personnel at Systime plc were co-operative and nobody was detained or threatened. At the time, solicitors for those interviewed questioned the content of one of the witnesses statements taken which was amended to their satisfaction. The solicitors and Systime plc were informed in January 1985 that no action would be taken. The Commissioners of Customs and Excise are unaware of any complaint about the conduct of their officers in this matter but will investigate thoroughly any specific allegations.

EMPLOYMENT

Small Businesses

62. Mr. Amess asked the Paymaster General what representations he has received over the last two years from small companies complaining about the payment time of large companies.

Mr. Trippier: I regularly receive representations from small firms about delays by large firms in payment of bills. These representations point out the adverse effect of delays on small firms' financial position. Consideration is being given to publishing guidance on good practice in payment of bills.

64. Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Paymaster General what further measures he intends to introduce to help small businesses.

Mr. Trippier: On Tuesday 12 November my right hon. and noble Friend announced a six-point programme of measures to encourage enterprise and employment. Measures to help small businesses include expansion of the enterprise allowance scheme, increased support for local enterprise agencies in England and an extension of the loan guarantee scheme. Increased finding for the promotion of tourism will also benefit many small businesses. Further measures will be announced as appropriate.

Tourist Industry

63. Mr. Tom Cox asked the Paymaster General what plans he has to give greater public support to the London tourist industry.

Mr. Trippier: The Government will continue to support the promotion of tourism in London, as elsewhere, through the English Tourist Board and the British Tourist Authority. The English Tourist Board provides an annual subvention to the non-statutory London Visitor and Convention Bureau and this too will continue. I am pleased by the bureau's efforts to increase its support from the private sector and I hope that the London boroughs will also recognise the importance of tourism to London's economy and the role which the LVCB can play in ensuring that tourism benefits are spread as widely as possible throughout the capital.

Mr. Pike asked the Paymaster General if he will give the figures for those employed in the tourist industry for each of the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Trippier: The available information on employment in tourism-related industries is regularly published in British Business. Figures for 1981 to 1985 are given in the issues of 5-9 November 1984 and 23-29 August 1985, copies of which are available in the Library.

Job Start Scheme

Ms. Clare Short asked the Paymaster General what is the Government's estimate of the impact that the job start scheme will have on wage levels.

Mr. Prescott asked the Paymaster General what is the Government's estimate of the impact that the job start scheme will have on the numbers of long-term unemployed and on wage levels.

Mr. Alan Clark: The job start scheme will be piloted in a number of different areas from January next year with a view to assessing its effectiveness. Its purpose is to help the long-term unemployed to get back into work. Any indirect effects it may have, for example on wage levels, or numbers of long-term unemployed people, can only be a matter for speculation at this stage.

Mr. Prescott asked the Paymaster General whether the proposed £20 allowance under the job start scheme will alter in any respect the legal obligations of employers to observe wages council terms and conditions.

Mr. Alan Clark: No.

Job Release Scheme

Mr. Butler asked the Secretary of State for Employment when he expects to announce rates of allowance and other details of the job release scheme beyond March 1986; and if the scheme will continue to apply to 64-year-old able-bodied men.

Mr. Alan Clark: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply on 18 November at column 38. An announcement on the rates of allowance will be made in due course.

Health and Safety

Mr. Skinner asked the Paymaster General how many persons have been (a) killed and (b) seriously injured as a result of an accident at work in 1983 and 1984 and the latest available date in 1985.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The table gives the number of deaths and major injuries to employees and self-employed people arising out of or in connection with work and reported to authorities responsible for enforcing the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1984. Figures for 1984 are provisional. No figures are yet available for 1985.

Year	Employees		Self-employed
	Deaths	Major injuries*	Deaths	Major injuries*
1983	443	12,447	64	114
1984	432	12,246	61	145

* Major injuries are as defined in the Notification of Accidents and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1980.

Mr. Skinner asked the Paymaster General how many employees are covered by the requirements of the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act at the latest available date.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The latest estimate is 20,826,000 as at 30 June 1985.

Mr. Skinner asked the Paymaster General how many health and safety inspectors there are per 10,000 people covered by the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There is approximately one inspector for every 10,000 people employed in premises subject to inspection by the Health and Safety Executive. Comparable information about inspectors employed by local authorities to enforce the Act is not available.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Canavan asked the Paymaster General what is the total number of registered unemployed people in the United Kingdom; and what is his estimate of the number of unemployed people who are not registered.

Mr. Alan Clark: In October 1985 there was a total of 3,277,000 unemployed claiming benefits in the United Kingdom. According to the labour force survey, in the spring of 1984 there were about 870,000 people in Great Britain and some 900,000 in the United Kingdom who were seeking work but not claiming benefit.

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Paymaster General if he will list the number of persons made redundant who are included in the unemployment count for each of the years 1979, 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983, 1984 and at the latest available date for which figures are available; and if he will also show this figure as a percentage of the total unemployed for each year.

Mr. Alan Clark: The information is not available in the precise form requested. I refer my hon. Friend to my reply on 28 October at columns 330-31.

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Paymaster General if he will list the numbers of disabled included in the unemployment count for each of the years 1979, 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983, 1984 and 1985; and if he will also show this as a percentage of total unemployment in each year.

Mr. Alan Clark: Following is the available information on disabled persons registered as unemployed in September each year from 1979 to 1982.

September	Disabled persons included in unemployment count Thousands	Percentage of total
1979	119·0	9·0
1980	143·1	7·3
1981	177·9	6·2
1982	188·4	5·9

Comparable figures are not available for later years following the removal in October 1982 of the compulsory requirement to register for employment as a condition for receipt of benefits. Figures for those with health problems or disabilities are now available from the labour force survey, as given in my reply to my hon. Friend on 28 October 1985 at column 332.

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Paymaster General (1) if he will state the number of people with low-paid part-time jobs who are claiming benefit;

(2) if he will estimate what percentage of those registered as unemployed also have low-paid part-time jobs.

Mr. Alan Clark: The labour force survey showed an estimated 105,000 or about 3½ per cent. of those claiming unemployment benefits had part-time paid jobs in the spring of 1984. No figures are available on the levels of pay received.

Disabled Persons

Sir David Price asked the Paymaster General what is his latest estimate of the number of registered disabled persons in Hampshire; how many of them are in employment; how many are unemployed; of those in employment how many are in open employment; and how many are in sheltered employment.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: At 5 April 1985, the latest date available, there were 9,204 registered disabled people in Hampshire. Information on the total numbers of those who are in employment, or who are unemployed, is not available. There are currently 371 registered disabled people in sheltered employment in Hampshire.

Labour Force Survey

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Paymaster General (1) when the latest labour force survey was published; and when the next is expected to be published;

(2) if he will make it his policy not to answer parliamentary questions using information collected in the 1984 labour force survey before the survey itself has been published; and if he will make a statement;

(3) when the labour force survey 1984 and the revised labour force survey 1984 will be published.

Mr. Alan Clark: Preliminary results from the 1984 labour force survey were published in the May 1985 issue of Employment Gazette. These results were revised when the official estimates of the mid-1984 population became available; and a note in the July 1985 issue of Employment Gazette announced that revised results — which differ only slightly from the preliminary results — were available from my Department. An article comparing the survey estimate of people seeking work with the monthly count was published in the October issue of Employment Gazette and further articles on selected topics are in preparation. Meanwhile, information from the survey is regularly used to answer parliamentary questions and other requests for data.

The office of population censuses and surveys (OPCS) also publishes selected results from the survey, first in a monitor and later in a report which includes a technical description of the survey. I understand that a monitor presenting 1984 results will appear early next year and OPCS plans to publish a report covering the 1983 and 1984 surveys next June. The OPCS report on the 1981 survey was published in 1982.

Labour force survey data are also frequently used in the Manpower Services Commission's labour market quarterly reports.

Copies of all the publications mentioned above are held in the Library.

It is my policy to provide hon. Members with the most up-to-date information possible in reply to parliamentary questions. Estimates from the labour force survey are therefore used as soon as the survey results have been checked.

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Paymaster General (1) how many women, who are single, widowed or separated, with dependent children under 16 years of age, have had benefit terminated because of refusal to accept employment, for each of the years 1979, 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983, 1984 and 1985 to date.

(2) how many men over 60 years of age claiming unemployment benefit had their benefit terminated because of failure to accept work, for each of the years 1979, 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983 and 1984.

Mr. Alan Clark: Information about the marital status, dependency position, age and sex of people who are disallowed unemployment benefit on various grounds is not separately recorded for statistical purposes.

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Paymaster General how many students were claiming unemployment benefit at 10 November.

Mr. Alan Clark: These figures are not collected on Sundays. I refer my hon. Friend to my reply of 14 November at column 230 for the latest figures. The next figures, relating to 14 November, will be published on 5 December.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Child Benefit

Mr. Irving asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate how many families with incomes of (a) less than £10,000 and (b) more than £10,000 are currently in receipt of child benefit; and what is the total cost in each case.

Mr. Newton: In 1983, the latest year for which figures are available, it is estimated that 3·2 million families with total gross incomes (including child benefit) of £10,000 a year or more were receiving a total of £1·8 billion in child benefit a year and that 3·8 million families with lower incomes were receiving a total of £2·2 billion in child benefit a year.

National Health Service

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the level of spending which has been devoted by his Department towards hospital works in each of the last five years, the total capital yielded from the sale of health authority land and property and the use which has been made of this capital as a result.

Mr. Whitney: The following table shows capital expenditure by health authorities and capital receipts between 1980-81 and 1984-85. Proceeds from the sale of surplus land and property are retained by health authorities and have contributed to the continuing major programme of investment in the National Health Service estate. Details of individual hospital works are not held centrally.

Year	Capital expenditure £ million	Capital receipts £ million
1980-81	563·2	15·6
1981-82	671·4	19·2
1982-83	686·4	18·8
1983-84	713·9	28·5
1984-85	795·4	50·6

Note: These figures are derived from the summarised accounts of health authorities.

General Practitioners

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his policy with regard to allowing general practitioners to advertise their services.

Mr. Hayhoe: This is a matter for the General Medical Council, which is responsible for regulating the professional conduct of doctors.

Smoking

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what specific research programmes have been carried out by his Department for the preparation of the advertising campaign which he intends to initiate to discourage youngsters from smoking.

Mr. Whitney: The campaign, which will be tested for a year in two television regions, is based on three pieces of research: a survey starting in May 1984 to establish ways of reaching teenagers with anti-smoking messages, a project commencing in February 1985 aimed at investigating the potential of media advertising for this purpose, and qualitative research on the effectiveness of particular creative approaches undertaken in July and August by the advertising agency appointed to run the campaign.

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the policy objectives underlying his Department's funding of (a) Action on Smoking and Health and (b) the Health Education Council.

Mr. Whitney: The Department provides financial assistance to Action on Smoking and Health in support of its efforts to increase public awareness of the dangers of smoking. The Health Education Council, which is largely financed by Government grant, was established to promote and coordinate health education in England, Wales and Northern Ireland. In pursuit of its objective the council initiates and supports health education campaigns through the National Health Service, the education service, the media and in other ways, produces health education materials, supports professional training programmes and sponsors appropriate research.

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what grant is currently paid to Action on Smoking and Health; when he will decide on whether a grant will be paid for the next financial year; and what criteria he will be taking into account.

Mr. Whitney: Action on Smoking and Health (ASH) has been allocated a grant of £150,840 in the current financial year. An application for funding in 1986-87 is expected shortly when consideration will be given to such factors as ASH's effectiveness in providing information to the public about smoking and health and the cost-effectiveness of its operations.

Hip Replacement Operations

Sir Dudley Smith asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the number of hip replacement operations which took place under the National Health Service over the past 12 months.

Mr. Whitney: In 1983, the latest year for which information is available centrally, there were an estimated 35,800 hip replacement operations on National Health Service patients in National Health Service hospitals in England.

North-West Thames Regional Health Authority

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report the names of the hospitals in the North-West Thames region where the laundry service has been given to outside contractors, the total of investment for the in-house laundry over the last 10 years and his estimate of the sale proceeds of the plant; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: The contract for district laundry services in Hounslow and Spelthorne health authority has been awarded to a private contractor. I regret that the other information requested is not available centrally.

Hearing Aids

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make available a moderate power body-worn hearing aid for use by patients who also have handling difficulties or arthritic fingers.

Mr. Newton: It is intended that the expected replacement for the OL56 moderate power body-worn hearing aid will be suitable for use by elderly patients with poor manual dexterity.

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make available within the National Health Service the in-canal aids (ITCS) which are recommended by otologists and audiologists for some patients suffering from a hearing loss.

Mr. Newton: There is no intention at present to add canal aids to the standard National Health Service range of hearing aids but consultants may prescribe commercial aids, including canal aids, when in their opinion this is clinically necessary.

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) when his Department last placed an order for BE50 hearing aids; what was the total ordered; and when he expects the next delivery to be sent to ear, nose and throat departments of hospitals in England;

(2) if he will make a statement on the shortage in the National Health Service of BE50 hearing aids and the waiting list of patients for whom this aid has been prescribed.

Mr. Newton: The Department no longer collects this information centrally. Responsibility for supplying hearing aids in England and Wales was transferred to the Mersey regional health authority on 1 April 1985. I suggest the hon. Member contacts the chairman of the regional health authority for detailed information.

Ambulance Services

Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report the recommended number of people per ambulance in the provision of full 24-hour ambulance cover in a community of average density of population which is partially urban and partially rural, and where the road system is average.

Mr. Whitney: Responsibility for the day-to-day management of ambulance services in England rests with health authorities locally. There is no central advice on vehicle manning levels. It is for each ambulance authority to determine the manpower needed to carry out the duties required in any particular 24-hour period. Variations in manning requirements will be affected by a number of factors which can be known and estimated only locally.

Orthotic and Prosthetic Services

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish the contractual terms for production of prosthetic and orthotic aids.

Mr. Newton: The Department awards contracts individually to manufacturers for the supply and repair of artificial limbs and certain appliances, and for their fitting in England. These provide for prices to be based on estimated volumes and costs plus a target profit figure, and for profit sharing within specified levels at the end of the contract period in the light of final figures. Contracting for the supply of orthopaedic footwear and surgical appliances is undertaken by the North West Thames regional health authority on behalf of the National Health Service. The conditions of contract are set out in part 3 of the handbook "Provision of Medical and Surgical Appliances", copies of which are in the Library.

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what steps he is taking to establish a career and salary structure in prosthetics and orthotics;

(2) what differentials in salary levels exist between National Health Service employees and those seconded to the National Health Service from commerce for duties in prosthetics and orthotics.

Mr. Whitney: There are no prosthetists employed in the National Health Service in England. There is a small number of orthotists employed and they are graded and paid on the same basis as the much larger group of medical physics technicians. No prosthetists or orthotists are seconded to the National Health Service from commercial firms. The position in Scotland is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Child Abuse

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what guidelines are being issued to general practitioners to detect signs of physical and sexual abuse in children.

Mr. Whitney: The Department is not issuing guidelines to general practitioners on the detection of physical and sexual abuse in children. Training for general practitioners in the recognition of child abuse is a matter for the profession itself and its corporate bodies.

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what training is included in his Department's certificate of qualification in social work courses regarding the detection of non-accidental injuries and the safeguarding of children at risk of such injuries.

Mr. Whitney [pursuant to his reply, 22 November 1985, c. 338]: The certificate of qualification in social work is awarded by the Central Council for Education and Training in Social Work which has responsibility for the approval of all courses leading to that qualification. Such courses all include teaching on legislation relating to children and on social work with children and families as well as practical placements. The council is reviewing current teaching and practice experience specifically related to non-accidental injuries and the extent to which it is feasible to provide further teaching and practice of that kind on these courses.

Health Education Council

Mr. Hayward asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he last met the chairman of the Health Education council; and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. Whitney: There was a meeting at ministerial level at the council's annual review on 7 March 1985. Subjects discussed included the council's financial allocations and priorities for 1985-86, the cost-effectiveness of its operations, its organisation and management, and links with the National Health Service.

No Smoking Campaign

Mr. Hayward asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will be making a grant available to the national no smoking day campaign 1986.

Mr. Whitney: Financial support will be offered by the Health Education Council.

Benefits

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his latest estimate of the number of supplementary benefit claimants working part time under the 30 hours rule.

Mr. Newton: The number of claimants working part-time at December 1983*, the latest date for which information is available, was 126,000.

*Source: 1983 annual statistical inquiry.

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his latest estimate of the number of registered unemployed people with no entitlement to unemployment benefit or supplementary benefit.

Mr. Newton: At November 1984, the latest date for which figures are available, there were 412,000 unemployed claimants in receipt of neither unemployment nor supplementary benefit (including 124,000 claimants whose entitlement had not yet been determined).

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what are his latest estimates of the average, maximum and minimum times it takes to process a claim for housing benefit, distinguishing between certificated and standard housing benefit.

Mr. Major: I regret that estimates are not available. The responsibility for the administration of the housing benefit scheme rests with individual local authorities. Information about the speed with which claims are processed is not collected centrally.

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish a table showing the unemployed by entitlement to benefit in April 1980, April 1984, and April 1985, distinguishing between those with (a) unemployment benefit only, (b) unemployment benefit plus supplementary benefit and (c) supplementary benefit only.

Mr. Newton: The information available is given in the table. Figures relate to November of each year and are not yet available for 1985.

	November 1980	November 1984
Unemployment benefit only	778,600	699,500
Unemployment and supplementary benefit	161,300	196,400
Supplementary benefit only	663,900	1,688,700

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the cost of social security payments in the United Kingdom per head of the working population for each of the years 1979-80, 1980-81, 1981-82, 1982-83, 1983-84, and 1984-85; and what is the proportion spent on administrative costs in each case.

Mr. Newton: The cost of social security payments in the United Kingdom per head of the working population (as defined for Table 1.1 of the monthly Employment Gazette) was:—

1979-80	750
1980-81	900
1981-82	1,100
1982-83	1,250
1983-84	1,350
1984-85	1,450

Administrative costs amounted to roughly 4½ per cent. of the total in each year.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has as to the amount of housing benefit paid to students in each of the past 10 years; what the projected figure is for the current and coming years; how many students received such payments in each year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major: The Green Paper on social security indicates the Goverment's view that it would be right in principle to return to the situation which existed before the introduction of supplementary benefit in 1966, with students being helped through the grant system, by their families, and by their own earnings in vacation. We are continuing to give consideration to how progress in this direction may most appropriately be made.

Spectacles

Mr. Wainwright asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will take steps to seek to reduce the delay between the prescribing of spectacles for children and their supply.

Mr. Whitney: The Department is aware of occasional delays in the supply of National Health Service frames. This arises from the changes in the scope of the general ophthalmic services introduced on 1 April causing manufacturers to switch much of their manufacturing from National Health Service frames to the production of frames for the expanded private market. The industry is nevertheless co-operating with the Department in maintaining its services for National Health Service patients.

Hearing Therapy

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many hearing therapists are currently being trained; how many are in post; and where they are employed.

Mr. Whitney: Although records are not kept centrally, I understand that there are at present over 50 hearing therapists in post in England, spread throughout all 14 National Health Service regions. Eleven students are on the current hearing therapy course.

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what have been the major developments in the prevention of deafness in the last year.

Mr. Whitney: Work has proceeded on a number of important initiatives. The National Rubella Council's campaign to improve immunisation rates in schoolgirls and adult women of childbearing age has continued during the year, with Government support. There have been further discussions about the proposed European Commission directive on the protection of workers from noise. The Health and Safety Commission's efforts to raise the awareness of people in industry to the dangers of exposure to excessive noise at work and the Health and Safety Executive's activity in enforcing relevant legal provision have continued during the last year.

Severe Disablement Allowance

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what problems have arisen in relation to assessment, administration or any other aspect of the introduction of the severe disablement allowance.

Mr. Newton: The introduction of any new benefit can present some initial difficulties while staff get used to the rules and procedures. For severe disablement allowance these difficulties were exacerbated by the disruption of the work of local offices arising from the protracted dispute at our Newcastle central office; and by medical boarding arrangements which led to unexpected delays in the settlement of certain claims. Mistakes have also been made in recording the numbers of claims. Steps have been taken to remedy these problems, and we are doing our best to ensure that claimants have their claims decided with the minimum of delay. I am keeping a close watch on the situation.

NHS (Unfilled Posts)

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many (a) physiotherapy, (b) occupational therapy and (c) clinical psychology posts are unfilled in (i) local and (ii) health authorities; what the cause is; and what short-term and long-term measures are being taken to remedy the shortage.

Mr. Whitney: Information on vacancies in local authorities is not collected centrally.

The results of a sample survey by health authorities last year suggested that nationally 4 per cent. of funded posts in physiotherapy and 15 per cent. in occupational therapy were unfilled after three months. Although we do not collect information centrally about vacancies, we have no indications of any general difficulty in recruiting clinical psychologists. Occasional problems in filling posts in some parts of the country and particular areas of service do however occur.

The shortfall in physiotherapy largely reflects the time normally taken to fill vacancies. The shortfall in occupational therapists is primarily due to an overall shortage of appropriately qualified staff, but other factors, such as geographical location, management arrangements and patterns of specialty also contribute to the problem.

In the short term we are considering with National Health Service management various ways of improving the supply of qualified occupational therapists and actively exploring longer term means of increasing numbers of students in training.

Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons Act

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what action his Department has taken over the last year to seek to ensure that local authorities are fulfilling their duties under the Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons Act 1970.

Mr. Newton: Prime responsibility for monitoring the implementation of the Act rests with local authorities themselves. We continue, however, to collect information about the manner in which the Act is operating in the ways indicated to the right hon. Member in my reply to him on 16 April at columns 122-23. In addition, if prima facie evidence is provided that a local authority is in breach of its statutory duty, further inquiries are made into the matter. Such inquiries have been made in two cases over the past year.

Bladder and Bowel Disfunction

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will publish in the Official Report the correspondence and documentation sent to him by the hon. Member for Eccles and received from the Wales Council for the Disabled about suppositories and bedtime urine drainage bags; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what representations he has received about the difficulties suffered by patients with bladder and bowel disfunction following the removal of certain medication from the prescribing list; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what representations he has received from patients with bladder or bowel disfunctions about the change of prescribing policy for bedtime urine drainage bags; if he will review the situation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: We have received a number of letters from, and on behalf of, patients with bladder or bowel disfunctions. These letters include correspondence provided by the hon. Member for Eccles from the Wales Council for the Disabled to which we will reply shortly. Because the reflux of urine from a drainage bag is a possible source of infection, it was decided that those night drainage bags which did not have a non-return valve should be excluded from the list of prescribable appliances from 1 July 1985. However, because some patients experienced difficulty with the alternative products, these bags will be made available on prescription again with effect from 1 December 1985.

Pharmacies (New Contract)

Mr. Oakes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many closures he estimates would result from the implementation of the new contract negotiated with pharmacists;

(2) what future discussions are planned with the pharmaceutical services negotiating committee on the implementation of the new contract;

(3) if he will, in this Session of Parliament, introduce legislation to implement the new contract negotiated with the pharmaceutical services negotiating committee.

Mr. Hayhoe: I shall let the right hon. Member have replies as soon as possible.

Mr. Oakes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what annual savings he anticipates would flow from the implementation of the new contract negotiated with the pharmaceutical services negotiating committee.

Mr. Hayhoe: It is anticipated that there will be savings of £4 million per annum once the pharmacists' new contract is implemented. Any savings would by agreement be shared equally between the Government and the profession.

Mr. Oakes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many pharmacies are at present applicants for a National Health Service contract; and what the figure was for each of the last six months.

Mr. Hayhoe: Under existing arrangements, pharmacists wishing to be included in the pharmaceutical list apply for inclusion through the Pharmaceutical Society of Great Britain, and I regret that the information requested is not available centrally.

Invalid Care Allowance (Married Women)

Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his latest estimate of the annual cost of extending the invalid care allowance to married women; and what reasons other than that of cost he has for not so doing.

Mr. Newton: An additional £85 million a year net of savings on other benefits. Even if such a sum were to be available, an extension of invalid care allowance to married women could be seen only as one of a number of competing priorities for what is available for social security spending as a whole. Consideration would also have to be given to other ways in which such resources could be used to support carers—for example, through the provision of social services or respite care.

Spina Bifida

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether the list of drugs currently available on prescription includes any drugs which can affect the development of spina bifida in children.

Mr. Hayhoe: No product licence has been granted for any medicinal product which includes amongst its indications protection from spina bifida or neural tube defect. As a matter of caution, a considerable number of drugs available on National Health Service prescription are not recommended for use in pregnancy.

Limited List Prescribing

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) whether he will add Pregnavite Forte to those drugs available on prescriptions;

(2) what alternative or equivalent medicine there is on the restricted list to Pregnavite Forte.

Mr. Hayhoe: I refer the right hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Crewe and Nantwich (Mrs. Dunwoody) on 25 November.

Dental Treatment

Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many patients receiving dental treatment under the National Health Service were required to pay the full cost of the treatment in the latest year for which figures are available; and what this figure is as a percentage of the total number of courses of dental treatment provided in that year;

(2) how many courses of dental treatment required some financial contribution from patients under the National Health Service in the latest year for which figures are available; and what this figure is as a percentage of the total number of courses of dental treatment provided in that year;

(3) how many courses of dental treatment were provided free of charge to patients under the National Health Service in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Hayhoe: A financial contribution was made by patients in 11,628,870 (38 per cent.) of the 30,970,830 courses of dental treatment provided in 1984. The remaining 19,341,960 courses of treatment were provided free of charge. Of those courses where a financial contribution was made it is estimated that in some 5·25 million to 5·5 million cases, (17 to 18 per cent. of all courses of treatment) the patients paid the full cost of their chargeable treatment.

Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will estimate the average charge currently paid by patients for dental treatment under the National Health Service, both in actual terms and as a percentage of the average cost of a course of treatment;

(2) if he will state, for those patients who are required to pay a charge for dental treatment under the National Health Service, what average percentage that charge represents of the average actual cost of the treatment.

Mr. Hayhoe: The estimated average charge per paying patient in 1985-86 is about £18. This represents about 60 per cent. of the average cost of the chargeable treatment.

Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he has any plans to alter the charge system for patients who receive dental treatment under the National Health Service;

(2) what recent representations he has received supporting changes in the charge system for dental treatment under the National Health Service;

(3) if he has made any estimate of the percentage level at which a proportional charge system would have to be levied for dental treatment under the National Health Service in order to raise the same level of revenue as is guaranteed by the current system of dental charges; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: I shall let my hon. Friend have replies as soon as possible.

Gwent County Council

Mr. Roy Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will grant additional financial support to Gwent county council to meet the cost of proposed changes in (a) pension arrangements and facilities and the introduction of family credit and (b) the operation of state maternity allowance.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: I have been asked to reply.

The Government's proposals for social security have not yet been finalised. Once they have been my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales will be consulting the Local Authorities Association on their effect in the usual way.

Mental Patients

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many patients have been detained under the Mental Health Act 1983; how many complaints were submitted to the Mental Health Act Commission about treatment of mental patients; and what findings arose from those complaints which were subsequently investigated.

Mr. Whitney [pursuant to his reply, 19 November 1985, c. 159-60]: Between the introduction of the Mental Health Act on 30 September 1983 and the end of that year there were 3,808 compulsory admissions to NHS mental illness and mental handicap hospitals and units in England.

Schoolchildren (Dietary Survey)

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to publish the costs of the dieting survey of schoolchildren referred to in his reply of 17 December 1984 to the hon. Member for Dunfermline, East (Mr. Brown), Official Report, columns 49-50, as expected to be available in spring 1985.

Mr. Whitney [pursuant to his reply, 22 November 1985, c. 339]: Analyses of the data collected in the dietary survey of school children are continuing. So far costs in England and Wales amount to £384,000.

Speech Therapy

Mr. Rowe asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will list such information as is available to him as to which institutions in the National Health Service offer courses leading to an honours degree in speech science, speech pathology or speech therapy;

(2) if he will list such information as is available to him, by National Health Service institution, as to the numbers of staff engaged in full or part-time teaching on courses leading to an honours degree in speech science, speech pathology or speech therapy; and if he will give any information he has as to whether their contracts are with the National Health Service or with some other employer.

Mr. Whitney [pursuant to his reply, 22 November 1985, c. 339]: There is one National Health Service institution which offers such courses, the National Hospitals' College of Speech Sciences. I understand that there is a total of 21 academic staff employed. I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply to the last part of his question about contracts as soon as possible.

Mr. Rowe asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list such information as is available to him, by institution within the National Health Service, as to the number of students currently sitting examinations for an honours degree in speech science, speech pathology or speech therapy.

Mr. Whitney [pursuant to his reply, 22 November 1985, c. 339]: I regret that this information is not available.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Fraud Squad (Solicitors)

Mr. Dalyell asked the Attorney-General how many additional solicitors have been recruited for work with the fraud squad over the past year; and what is the number of solicitors so employed.

The Solicitor-General: The fraud investigation group was set up by the Director of Public Prosecutions, after consultation with the Attorney-General, in January 1985. Eleven lawyers were allocated to the group, including a principal assistant director (grade 3) and two assistant directors (grade 5). In October 1984 a third general fraud division was added to the two fraud divisions which then existed. This division is headed by an assistant director (Grade 5), and four lawyers have been assigned to the division. All these staff have been allocated from within the existing complement of staff at the Director of Public Prosecutions' department.

Magistrates

Mr. Wigley asked the Attorney-General, pursuant to the answer of 15 November, Official Report, column 294, if he will indicate how many of the 1,585 magistrates in Wales who acknowledge a political viewpoint identify themselves with each of the political parties, respectively.

The Solicitor-General: The breakdown of political views is given in the table with the caveat that views are indicated prior to appointment and may have since changed and that appointments were at dates widely ranging from the present.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Unlawful Sex (Report)

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he plans any changes in his policy relating to unlawful sex in the light of the report by the Howard League for Penal Reform on that subject, a copy of which has been sent to him.

Mr. Mellor: No.

Parole

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many reported breaches of parole were received by his Department in 1984; and, of these, how many resulted in recall and how many in warning letters being issued.

Mr. Mellor: This information is not available in the form requested; but in 1984, 512 parole licences were revoked and 302 warning letters were issued after parolees had come to adverse notice.

Metropolitan Police

Mr. Knowles asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish for each division in the Metropolitan police comparative numbers of the following ranks in post now and in 1960; deputy commissioner, assistant commissioner, deputy assistant commissioner, commander, chief superintendent, superintendent, chief inspector, inspector, sergeant and constable.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Commissioner informs me that divisional figures for 1960 are not available. The breakdown by rank, of the officers in post in the Metropolitan police as a whole on 31 December 1960 and 31 October 1985 is as follows:

31 December 1960		Equivalent Ranks at 31 October 1985
Rank	Strength	Rank	Strength
Assistant Commissioner	5*	Assistant Commissioner	5*
Commander	8	Deputy Assistant Commissioner	17
Deputy Commander	10
Chief Superintendent	50	Commander	40
Superintendent (I)	175	Chief Superintendent	188
Superintendent (II)	24	Superintendent	237
Chief Inspector	173	Chief Inspector	514
Inspector	652	Inspector	1,381
Sergeant	2,863	Sergeant	4,395
Constable	13,282	Constable	19,955
TOTAL	17,242		26,732

* Includes the Deputy Commissioner who is an Assistant Commissioner appointed Deputy Commissioner by Warrent under section 8 of the Metropolitan Police Act 1856.

Victims Support Schemes

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what support Her Majesty's Government have given in 1985 to the National Association of Victims Support Schemes and local victims of violence schemes.

Mr. Mellor: In the current financial year, the Government are making a grant of £120,000 to the National Association of Victims Support Schemes, and in addition providing £6,000 towards the cost of the association's move to new premises. There is no provision for direct grants from the Government to local victims support schemes, but a number are receiving assistance from the Government via the urban programme, the DHSS "Opportunities for Volunteering" scheme and Manpower Services Commission programmes.

Crime Prevention

Mr. Flannery asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what indicators are used by his Department to assess the effectiveness of its crime prevention policies.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Home Office and the police undertake research for this purpose. For example, the results of a property marking demonstration project in South Wales published earlier this year revealed a 40 per cent. reduction in domestic burglaries in the project area during the evaluation period, and an evaluation of a neighbourhood watch scheme in Bristol showed a drop in overall crime of 22 per cent. The effectiveness of crime prevention measures is also assessed in terms of their impact on the fear of crime, and the level of public confidence they generate measured for example by local surveys.

Police Injuries (Cleveland)

Mr. Holt asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Cleveland on how many policeman in Cleveland were injured in the course of their duties in 1985 to date, 1984, 1983 and 1974.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I understand from the chief constable of Cleveland that the number of police officers of his force injured in the course of their duties in the periods requested are as follows:

	Numbers
*1985	468
1984	403
1983	354
1974	181

* To 31 October.

Fingerprinting, Detention and Body Searches

Mr. Kaufman asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) for each year since 1979, for each police authority in England and Wales, what is the number of persons fingerprinted against their will;

(2) if he will publish a breakdown for the year 1984 of the numbers of persons in each police force area in England and Wales detained by the police for up to six hours, six to 12 hours, 12 to 18 hours, 18 to 24 hours and longer than 24 hours before being charged with an offence;

(3) if he will call for reports from the relevant chief constables as to how many persons were the subject of intimate body searches by the police in each year since 1979 in each police force area in England and Wales.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The information requested is not available. For the future, section 50 of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 will require chief officers of police to publish in their annual reports information about the number of people kept in police detention for more than 24 hours and subsequently released without charge; the number of applications for warrants of further detention and the results of these applications; and, in relation to each warrant of further detention, the period of further detention authorised under it, the period which the detained person spent in police detention under its authority, and whether he was charged or released without charge. Section 55 of the Act will require chief officers of police to publish in their annual reports information about the total number of intimate searches, the number conducted by a suitably qualified person, the number not so conducted but conducted in the presence of such a person, and the result of these searches. The information will also include, as separate items, the total number of drug offence searches and their results. These provisions will be implemented on 1 January 1986.

Stop and Search

Mr. Kaufman asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many persons in the Metropolitan police area were stopped and searched by the police; how many such stops and searches resulted in (a) detection of an alleged offence, (b) charging of a person with an offence and (c) conviction of a person for an offence; and what were the offences involved in the above cases, for each year since 1979;

(2) if he will call for reports from the appropriate chief constables as to the following information in respect of each police force area in England and Wales other than the Metropolitan police area, namely (a) for each area since 1979, the number of persons who were stopped and searched by the police, (b) the numbers of such stops and searches, respectively, which resulted in (i) detection of an alleged offence, (ii) charging of a person with an offence and (iii) conviction of a person for an offence, stating the offences involved in the above cases.

Mr. Hurd: I shall write to the right hon. Member.

Miss Sara Keays

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if any complaint has been received from Miss Sara Keays regarding the conduct of the police in connection with their investigations into alleged offences under the Official Secrets Acts.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I understand that no such complaint has been received.

Greater Manchester Fire Authority

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what spending level he has set for the Greater Manchester fire authority for 1986-87; how this compares in real terms with the 1985-86 spending level; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what recent representations he has received from the Greater Manchester fire authority about the spending level he has set for the authority for 1986-87; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will now redetermine the spending level he has set for the Greater Manchester fire authority for 1986-87.

Mr. Giles Shaw: My right hon. and learned Friend, the then Home Secretary, announced on 26 July at column 811 a provisional expenditure level of £37·886 million of which £37·803 million was for the fire service. On 30 October the authority submitted an application for redetermination to £41·723 million (£41·640 million for fire). The application estimated that the 1985-86 outturn expenditure on the fire service by the metropolitan county council would be £37·790 million. No application has been made for civil defence.

On 5 November the authority requested a meeting to discuss this application. The authority's application is being carefully considered and my right hon. Friend intends to announce a decision by the time of the 1986-87 RSG settlement in mid-December. A response will soon be made to the authority's request for a meeting.

Fires in the Home (Deaths)

Mr. Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish for each fire authority in England and Wales figures showing the number of deaths in fires in the home for the last three years for which statistics are available.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Information on deaths in fires in dwellings attended by local authority fire brigades is published annually in "Fire Statistics United Kingdom" (tables 58 and 59 of the issues for 1982 and 1983 respectively). The issue of "Fire Statistics, United Kingdom" for 1984 has not yet been published, but provisional figures are given in the following table:

Greater Manchester Police

Mr. Kaufman asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what reply he has sent to the letter to him from the clerk of the Greater Manchester police authority with regard to the financial problems of Greater Manchester police.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I assume that the right hon. Member has in mind the letter of 31 October applying on behalf of the Greater Manchester police authority for a redetermination of its expenditure level for 1986-87 which my right hon. Friend set under section 3 of the Rates Act 1984. We are considering this application. My right hon. Friend's decision will be notified to the police authority during December.

Trade Unions (Prison Board Access)

Mr. Maxton asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department why the Home Office trade unions are not given access to the full prison board; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: A meeting with the full prison board would be outside both the formal Whitley machinery and the usual arrangements for the informal conduct of business between the prison department of the Home Office and the Home Office trade unions. The executive members of the prisons board are expected, within their respective areas of responsibility, to consult fully with the trade unions through these channels and to ensure that the board is informed of relevant views.

ENVIRONMENT

Council Housing

Mr. Lightbown asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give details of plans for further encouragement of the sale of public sector flats and wider private sector involvement in the ownership and management of council housing.

Mr. John Patten: Yes. A number of factors have discouraged tenants of flats from buying their homes. In recognition of this, my right hon. Friend and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales propose to increase the discounts available on flats under the right to buy scheme. The new discount scale will run from 42 per cent. to 70 per cent.; the present upper limit is 60 per cent. on flats. No change is proposed in the discount scale for houses, which currently runs from 32 per cent. to 60 per cent.

The general consents will be amended to enable the new discount scale to apply straight away to voluntary sales of flats.

Proposals to give further protection to buyers of flats against unexpectedly high service charges for repairs in the early years of the lease were announced in answer to a Question for the hon. Member for Tayside, North (Mr. Walker) on 22 October, at column 129.

We have also received representations that the requirement to repay discount on resale can cause hardship, and can be an obstacle to people who wish to move to take up employment. We propose to reduce the repayment period, for houses as well as flats, from five to three years. The full discount will be repayable on disposal in the first year after purchase; two thirds in the second year; and one third in the third year.

This change will apply to former tenants who have already bought their homes under the right to buy, and most voluntary sales schemes, except where an owner has become liable to repay discount before the new provisions come into force.

We shall also introduce provisions to enable local authorities to encourage greater tenant participation in management through the delegation of management responsibilities to a wide range of bodies; to safeguard tenants' right to buy where the ownership of tenanted estates is transferred from the local authority to (for example) a trust; and to enable housing management start-up, training and education grants to be made to encourage better and more innovative management. We shall be writing to the local authority associations and others on these provisions shortly. We shall also extend the present ground for possession (and the associated arrangements for compensation) where a local authority intends to develop or do works to a dwelling to cases where possession is required for disposal to the private sector, for renovation or redevelopment as part of a scheme approved by the Secretary of State.

We expect to introduce a Bill shortly to give effect to these proposals.

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the number of empty council properties in each of the London boroughs on 31 October.

Sir George Young: Information for 31 October is not available. The figures relating to 1 April 1985 provided by the authorities, including the Greater London council, in their housing investment programme returns are listed in column A81 of the "HIP1 (1985) all items print" which is available in the Library.

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will bring forward legislative proposals to give local authority tenants the right to manage all or part of their estates by tenant management co-operatives.

Mr. John Patten: I have no immediate plans to provide a statutory right for tenant management co-operatives to take on management responsibilities. However, I am giving every encouragement to local authorities to make voluntary arrangements of this kind, and I refer the hon. Member to the answer which I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Staffordshire, South-East (Mr. Lightbown).

Water Authorities

47. Mr. Allan Roberts asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if, in the next public expenditure White Paper, he will indicate specifically the provision made as regards (a) changes in expenditure by water authorities and (b) income arising from privatisation of their activities.

Mr. John Patten: I expect the next public expenditure White Paper to include information about water authorities' external finance and investment similar to that published this year in part 5 of Cmnd. 9428-II.

The Government have not yet reached decisions on the possibility of privatisation for water authorities. In any case, because estimates for future receipts from special sales of assets are dependent on commercially sensitive assumptions about content, timing and market conditions, no attempt is made to break down current and future year figures.

Housing (Welwyn Hatfield)

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for the Environment why no information of the housing needs appraisal; dwelling stock position at 1 April is available for Welwyn Hatfield district council; if he will now take steps to secure this information; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: The housing investment programme submission by Welwyn Hatfield district council, of which this information forms part, was placed in the Library in early August.

Grant-related Expenditure

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from local authorities in response to his announcement in October of provisional grant-related expenditures for 1986-87.

Mrs. Rumbold: Up to 27 November, I had received representations from 23 local authorities about provisional GREs for 1986-87.

Wirral (Labour Statistics)

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many people were employed by Wirral metropolitan council in 1979 and at the latest available date in total and (a) according to the numbers of part-time and full-time staff employed in both years and (b) as full-time equivalents for both years.

Mrs. Rumbold: The available information is as follows:

Wirral Metropolitan District Council

	June 1979	June 1985
Full-time staff	10,014	7,986
Part-time staff	5,304	6,322
Total staff	15,318	14,308

Information on full-time equivalents for individual authorities is not available centrally.

Homelessness (London)

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the number of homeless families in each of the London boroughs on 31 October.

Sir George Young: The latest available information on homelessness refers to the second quarter of 1985 and is published for each local authority as table 9(b) in "Local Housing Statistics No. 75" (November 1985), a copy of which is available in the Library.

Crown Suppliers

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he now expects to publish the report of the review team considering the future of the Crown Suppliers.

Sir George Young: It would not be appropriate to publish the complete report, because it contains commercial information given to the review team in confidence. My right hon. Friend hopes soon to provide the departmental trade union side with details of the team's findings and recommendations to enable it to let him have its considered views.

Enterprise Zones

Mr. Guy Barnett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will seek powers to allow him to insist on a public inquiry about a proposal for development in an enterprise zone; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: No.

House Purchase (Searches)

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will bring forward legislation imposing a set time scale for local authorities to provide the results of searches in respect of house purchase.

Mr. John Patten: Local authority responses to local searches and inquiries were considered in both the second report of the Conveyancing Committee and the report of the interdepartmental group on simplifying house buying, copies of which are in the Library. Both reports recognised the importance of speeding up responses and made recommendations.

In October this year the Government appointed a Standing Committee on Conveyancing to promote changes in practice and procedure in the light of the recommendations of the second report. The Committee's first objective will be to bring about improvements within two years which will be apparent to ordinary housebuyers and sellers.

Leasehold Property

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will bring forward legislation to allow leaseholders of flats (a) to buy the freehold collectively, (b) to hire and dismiss managing agents, (c) to have the right to have the freeholders accounts examined by an auditor of their choice and (d) the same right to extend the lease as applies to houses.

Mr. John Patten: These are all matters which we will take into account in considering the report of the committee chaired by Mr. E. G. Nugee QC on the management of privately owned blocks of flats, which was published on 14 November.

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will bring forward legislation to extend the Leasehold Reform Act 1967 to include flats and maisonettes.

Mr. John Patten: Before this could be considered it will be necessary to resolve the technical difficulties over the enforcement against successive owners of freehold flats of positive covenants dealing with the repair and maintenance of common parts and the provision of common services. My noble and learned Friend the Lord Chancellor is considering Law Commission report No. 127, which proposes a way of dealing with these difficulties, and he intends to give the public an opportunity to comment on the Government's provisional conclusions before any major reform of the law relating to positive and negative covenants is proposed.

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish for each year since the Leasehold Reform Act 1967 came into operation the numbers who (a) have purchased freeholds and (b) have extended their leases under that Act; and if he will give a regional breakdown of the figures.

Mr. John Patten: The Government have never collected information about individual transactions between freeholders and leaseholders under the Leasehold Reform Act 1967.

Housing Committees (Tenants Representation)

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will bring forward legislation giving a right to representation by tenants on local authority housing committees.

Mr. John Patten: I have no present plans to do so. The system of co-option of non-elected members is, however, being considered in the wider context of the Widdecombe committee of inquiry into the conduct of local authority business.

Home Purchase Costs (Government Contributions)

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list Government contributions since 1979 towards reducing the costs of buying and selling homes.

Mr. John Patten: In 1980 and 1982 the stamp duty thresholds were raised by £5,000 on each occasion. In 1984 the thresholds were again raised and the main rate of duty reduced to 1 per cent.

The relaxaton of restrictions on solicitors' advertising has already resulted in significant reductions in conveyancing costs. The Government have added further competitive impetus through legislation which allows qualified non-solicitors to carry out conveyancing for reward. In addition, we intend to bring forward legislation to allow building societies to expand their activities in the house transfer market. The increased competition will benefit house buyers and sellers directly.

The Government's commitment to making house buying and selling cheaper and simpler is reflected in the establishment of a Standing Committee on Conveyancing in October of this year. The committee's first objective will be to bring about improvements within two years which will be apparent to ordinary housebuyers and sellers.

Noise Insulation

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will seek to introduce minimum noise insulation standards for housing construction.

Mr. John Patten: The building regulations at present require that the walls and floors between new dwellings should have a reasonable resistance to sound.

Housing Standards

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will seek to introduce minimum space and layout standards for housing construction.

Mr. John Patten: This is not a matter which is appropriate for regulations.

Housing Expenditure

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the percentage decrease in housing expenditure between 1980 and 1985.

Sir George Young: Figures for housing expenditure in 1985 are not yet available. But between 1980 and 1984 total public and private expenditure on housing increased by 41 per cent. in cash terms and 7 per cent. in terms of constant value of money.

Truscon Houses (Liverpool)

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to receive the report of the Building Research Station into Truscon RD27 houses in Storrington avenue, Liverpool; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: I expect to receive the Building Research Establishment's findings on Truscon RD27 houses in Liverpool shortly. I shall inform the hon. Member of its conclusions.

Coalfields Community Campaign

Mr. Mason asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will arrange for an exhibition relating to the coalfields community campaign to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I understand that arrangements have been made with the authorities of the House for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from Monday 9 December to Friday 13 December.

PRIME MINISTER

Rail Travel

Q8. Dr. Marek asked the Prime Minister if she has travelled by rail in the course of her official duties during the past year.

The Prime Minister: No.

MSC (Education and Training)

Q35. Mr. Patrick Thompson asked the Prime Minister if she is satisfied with the role of the Manpower Services Commission in the effort to raise standards in education and training.

The Prime Minister: Yes; there is much more to be done but I am satisfied that the Manpower Services Commission, in liaison with the education service where appropriate, is making an important contribution to the raising of standards in education and training.

News Blackout (Criteria)

Q61. Mr. Dalyell asked the Prime Minister what are the arrangements for Her Majesty's Government to request a news blackout on a particular event, and what are the criteria for determining whether such a request is activated.

The Prime Minister: There are no such arrangements.

Southall

Q104. Mr. Bidwell asked the Prime Minister if she will make an official visit to Southall.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Engagements

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 28 November.

Mr. Greenway asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 28 November.

Mr. Colvin asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 28 November.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 28 November.

Mr. Pike asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for 28 November.

Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 28 November.

Mr. Stephen Ross asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 28 November.

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 28 November.

Mr. Wallace asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 28 November.

Mr. Penhaligon asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 28 November.

Mr. Ashdown asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 28 November.

Mr. Alton asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 28 November.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meetings of the Cabinet and had meetins with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in this House I shall be having further meetings later today.

Public Money (Allocation)

Mr. Marlow asked the Prime Minister what is the total overall identifiable allocation of public money made by the Government since 1979 to (a) Edinburgh, (b) Bristol, (c) Lambeth, (d) Newcastle, (e) Hammersmith, (f) Cardiff, (g) Haringey, (h) Southampton, (i) Leicester, (j) Leeds, (k) Wandsworth, (l) Belfast and (m) Northampton (i) in total, (ii) per person, (iii) per unemployed person, (iv) per unemployed person aged under 21 years and (v) per retirement pensioner, in each named district.

The Prime Minister: I shall reply to my hon. Friend shortly.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Regional Policy

44. Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will introduce measures to help the economy of the north of England.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The Government's economic policies are creating conditions for a sustainable growth in jobs and output in the whole country. In addition, improved measures of regional assistance were announced a year ago today and these apply widely throughout the north of England. I have no plans to amend these policies.

Regional Selective Assistance

Mr. Hawksley asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many firms have applied for regional selective assistance in the west midlands since it became available there; how many applications have been approved; how these applications are divided between firms employing (a) one to 10 persons, (b) 11 to 20 persons or (c) 21 to 50 persons; how much money has been approved in each category; and what figure was the smallest amount approved in each category to an individual firm.

Mr. Peter Morrison: There have been 607 applications. So far 188 formal offers of grant have been made to a total value of £22·6 million and this is associated with some 13,800 jobs either created or safeguarded. I regret that a breakdown of grant offers by company employee sizeband is not yet available, but grants have ranged from £3,000 towards projects from the smaller companies to well over £1 million in the larger cases.

Overseas Mail

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has made any assessment of the effect upon British exports of proposed increases in tariffs for overseas mail; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Pattie: No. Overseas postal tariffs are the responsibility of the Post Office and my right hon. and learned Friend, the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, has no power to intervene. However, we expect that the adverse impact of tariff changes on some mail users will be offset by the effect on others of reducing cross-subsidies within overseas postal services.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if, when he next meets the chairman of the Post Office, he will raise the subject of increases in the prices of overseas mail.

Mr. Pattie: No.

Universal Postal Union Congress

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Trade and industry who will represent the United Kingdom at the next Universal Postal Union Congress.

Mr. Pattie: It is customary for a joint delegation comprising officials from the Department of Trade and Industry and the Post Office to represent the United Kingdom in this forum.

Post Office

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has received any representations concerning the implications of the current external financing limit for the capital investment programme of the Post Office; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Pattie: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assumptions were made when fixing the external financing limit for the Post Office for 1986-87 as to the implications for tariffs within the overall financial framework of the Post Office.

Mr. Pattie: Pricing decisions are a matter for the Post Office Board, but in determining the Post Office's external financing limit for 1986-87 my right hon. and learned Friend, the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, assumed a general level of tariffs consistent with the Government's policy on nationlised industry pricing. Our expectation is that the Post Office will be able to maintain its recent record of reductions, in real terms, in the cost of first and second class postage.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has recently received concerning the implications of Government external financing limits for tariffs charged by the Post Office.

Mr. Pattie: Apart from the views of the Post Office given in discussions with my Department about future financing needs, the Post Office Users' National Council has commented on this question.

Hong Kong Festival

Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any record of any business generated by the West Midlands county council's participation in the Birmingham and West Midlands festival held in Hong Kong in October and November 1984.

Mr. Channon: The West Midlands county council participation was not financially supported by the British Overseas Trade Board. We have no record of resulting business.

Electronics Industry (United States Inspectors)

Mr. Hoyle asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, further to the answer of 11 November, Official Report, column 44, when a decision will be reached in relation to the visits by American inspectors to companies buying American electronics.

Mr. Channon: A decision will be made as soon as possible.

United States Distribution Licence Regulations

Mr. Hoyle asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will place in the Library the terms of the new United States distribution licence regulations.

Mr. Channon: Yes.

Soviet Union

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he is taking to promote trade with the Soviet Union.

Mr. Channon: I take every opportunity to encourage United Kingdom firms to seek business in the USSR, which represents a challenging but promising market. The Department of Trade and Industry provides advice and assistance to companies and will be drawing their attention to promising areas highlighted in the five-year plan. Many companies are currently bidding for major projects in the USSR. The overseas project fund is available to support them, while ECGD is currently considering flexible financing packages for these projects. The BOTB offers financial and administrative support for missions and exhibitions. The Department provides a grant-in-aid to the East European Trade Council, the area advisory group which covers the Soviet Union. Attempts are being made to agree an early date for the next session of the Anglo-Soviet joint commission and for the signature of a new programme for economic and industrial co-operation, an important document which highlights sectors and products where we and the Soviet Government have identified the best opportunities for collaboration. I have every hope that Mr. Gorbachev's target of a 40-50 per cent. increase in trade can be achieved over the next few years.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has regarding the approach of the United States' Administration towards renewal of the multi-fibre arrangement.

Mr. Channon [pursuant to his reply, 27 November 1985]: The United States have stated that they consider that the MFA should be renewed but as far as I am aware they have not yet determined their detailed policy approach.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

University Students

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his response to the letter which he has received from the chairman of the University Grants Committee about his proposed reduction in the number of places for university students.

Mr. Walden: The letter from the chairman of the University Grants Committee of 11 November, which has been published, conveyed the committee's response to the Green Paper "The Development of Higher Education into the 1990s" (Cmnd. 9524). It will be taken into account, with other responses to the Green Paper, in the formulation of the promised further statement of policy on higher education which the Government hope to be able to make next year.

Part-time University Students

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what considerations he has given to the possibility of arranging payments of course fees to all part-time university students.

Mr. Walden: Fees are paid to institutions as part of the mandatory award made in respect of full-time university students. To extend mandatory support, even if limited to fees, would result in a substantial increase in public expenditure and cannot be contemplated at the present time.

Student Awards

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make provision for exceptions to present regulations exempting students from having to pay back an overpayment mistakenly made by a local education authority where a student has made a full disclosure of all facts as to his or her financial position to the local education authority.

Mr. Walden: No. It would be inappropriate to allow students to keep public money mistakenly paid to them.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his response to the request which has been submitted to his Department by the National Union of Students for re-establishment of the minimum maintenance award.

Mr. Walden: There is no intention to reintroduce into the awards system a feature which would insulate higher income families from increased parental contributions when higher contributions than before are assessed of parents in the middle income bands.

Open University

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has as to how long people have to wait before being admitted to courses of the Open University.

Mr. Walden: In recent years the majority of applicants have been offered places for the year for which they applied. Those unable to be offered a place for that year were offered a place in the subsequent year if they reapplied.

University Employees (Salaries)

Mr. Allen McKay asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the percentage increase in a university lecturer's salary—maximum—since October 1979, as compared with the rise in the retail price index during the same period.

Sir Keith Joseph: Between October 1979 and April 1984 (the date of the last pay increase) a university lecturer's salary maximum has increased by 50·9 per cent. as compared with a rise in the retail prices index of 48·4 per cent. during the same period.

Mr. Allen McKay asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he will set up an independent review body to decide upon university employees' salary scales;

(2) what measures he is prepared to take to increase the salary of a university lecturer to bring it into line with the rise of the cost of living index since October 1979.

Sir Keith Joseph: Pay negotiations are in progress between the university employers and the staff side. It is for the employers to consider proposals from the staff side in the first place.

Geophysics

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he now hopes to receive the advice of the Advisory Board for the Research Councils on the Royal Society report on support of geophysics in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Walden: I understand that the ABRC will be discussing the Royal Society report on the support of geophysics in the United Kingdom in the new year. It is for the board to consider what advice to offer my right hon. Friend in the light of that discussion.

WALES

Roads (Expenditure)

Mr. Roy Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will show forecast outcome expenditure for 1985-86 and planned expenditure for 1986-87, 1987-88 and 1988-89 on (a) trunk roads capital, (b) trunk roads current, (c) local authority roads capital and (d) local authority roads current.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The provisional forecast of net outturn expenditure for 1985-86 is:

	£ million
Central Government—trunk roads:
Capital	88
Current	13
*Local authority transport and highways:
Capital	69
Current	110

* An estimate based on local authority returns which do not separately identify the highways element.

The autumn statement by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer involves consequential changes for the Welsh Office expenditure programme. Decisions will be made on the allocation of provision for roads and other services in my expenditure block within the next few weeks. Details will be announced in the public expenditure White Paper early in the new year.

District Health Authorities

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a table showing the revenue expenditure of each district health authority in Wales for each year since reorganisation of the National Health Service.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The information requested is given in the following table:

Welsh Language (Farming Consultations)

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy, when arranging meetings, lectures or discussions with farmers at Gwynedd, to ensure that such meetings should be conducted in the Welsh language.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: My policy is that meetings, lectures or discussions arranged by the Department with farmers or any other group in Gwynedd or in any other part of Wales shall be held in the language most appropriate to the circumstances. Account is taken of the preferences of those attending, and, necessarily, of the competence in Welsh/English of those addressing the meeting.

Milk Production

Sir Raymond Gower asked the Secretary of State for Wales what advice his Department is currently giving to Welsh farmers regarding alternatives to milk production in areas most affected by the quota scheme.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Milk producers will adapt their enterprises in the light of changes to their particular circumstances. The Agricultural Development and Advisory Services is available to assist producers in making those decisions and to advise on alternatives to milk production.

Homes Insulation

Sir Raymond Gower asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he plans any changes in the present criteria for eligibility for the homes insulation scheme.

Mr. Mark Robinson: We have no plans at this time to change the criteria.

Housing Regeneration

Sir Raymond Gower asked the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has as to the number of major housing estates in Wales in need of regeneration; and what is his policy towards the participation of housing associations and the Land Authority for Wales in such regeneration schemes.

Mr. Mark Robinson: A substantial number of local authority housing estates in Wales would benefit from physical regeneration and better management. We continue to allocate resources to promote physical improvements and we are actively pursuing management initiatives. Our three designated priority estates projects are already showing what can be done through decentralised and accountable management, and feasibility studies have recently taken place on the basis of which we hope to designate three further projects. We propose to bring forward legislation in the current Session to encourage greater tenant participation in management through the delegation of management esponsibilities to a wide range of bodies. We shall continue to promote the involvement of all with a part to play in improving public sector housing.

EMPLOYMENT

Job Creation

43. Mr. Knox asked the Paymaster General whether he intends to introduce any new measure to reduce the level of unemployment.

Mr. Alan Clark: In addition to our £2,000 million programme of employment and training measures giving practical help to unemployed people, my right hon. and Noble Friend recently announced two new pilot schemes specifically to help long-term unemployed people to find work.

Health and Safety

Mr. Skinner asked the Paymaster General how many employers have been prosecuted under the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act in the last 12 months.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: In the year to 30 September 1985 the courts dealt with 1,459 charges laid by Health and Safety Executive inspectors alleging breaches by employers of the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act or associated legislation. In some cases more than one information was laid against an employer.

Job Start Scheme

Mr. Prescott asked the Paymaster General (1) whether he will introduce safeguards to the job start scheme to prevent employers from substituting existing jobs with jobs under the new scheme; and whether any safeguards are envisaged to prevent employers replacing expired job start posts with fresh places under the scheme;

(2) what is the proposed method of payment of the allowance under the job start scheme;

(3) what are the pilot scheme regions for the job start scheme;

(4) whether the proposed £20 allowance under the job start scheme will be counted as income for the purposes of calculating (i) tax, (ii) national insurance contributions, (iii) housing benefit and (iv) family income supplement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The pilot areas for the new schemes to help the long-term unemployed will be the following nine areas:

Billingham
Preston
Stoke-on-Trent
Huddersfield
Ealing
Plymouth
Crawley and Horsham
Dundee
Port Talbot and Neath

The pilot schemes will run for six months from January 1986. They will consist of in-depth counselling interviews in jobcentres, a new short course designed specifically to meet the needs of the long-term unemployed and the job start allowance of £20 a week payable for six months to anyone who takes a job with gross earnings of less than £80 a week.

The job start allowance will be paid direct to the employee and will be free of national insurance contributions for both employees and employers. As income arising from employment, it will be taxable, but it will not be taken into account in calculating entitlement to family income supplement and housing benefit. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services will be carrying out the appropriate consultations before laying regulations before the House to exempt the job start allowance from consideration for family income supplement and housing benefit purposes. The job start allowance will provide a financial incentive for the long-term unemployed to take some of the increasing number of unfilled vacancies. There will be no financial advantage to the employer, and hence there is no reason why employers should seek to substitute recruits from the long-term unemployed for their existing employees.

Regional Tourist Boards

Mr. Couchman asked the Paymaster General what efforts he is making to ensure that more responsibility is devolved to the regional tourist boards.

Mr. Trippier: The English Tourist Board has already taken some welcome steps following the Government's 1983 tourism review to devolve activities to the regional tourist boards including by providing some additional funding for regional marketing initiatives and delegating section 4 appraisal work for smaller cases. The regional boards will also be responsible for administering the new voluntary hotel registration scheme. My Department will be discussing with the ETB how the regional boards' role can be further strengthened so that they can contribute more effectively to the development of tourism in England.

Youth Training (Deaf People)

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Paymaster General how many deaf young people have been trained on the youth training scheme in the last two years; and how many of them were able to obtain paid employment after their training.

Mr. Trippier: Information relating specifically to deaf young people is not available.

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Paymaster General what special help has been give to deaf trainees on the youth training scheme to facilitate full participation by them.

Mr. Trippier: The youth training scheme is open equally to all eligible young people including those with disabilities such as deafness. Disabled youngsters are eligible to enter the scheme up to the age of 21. The Manpower Services Commission has introduced a number of measures to enable those who need special help to gain maximum benefit from the scheme and has produced publicity material to encourage them to participate. The new two-year youth training scheme will provide funding for an interpreter service for deaf young people to help them, where this is necessary, participate fully in the scheme.

Disabled People (Employment)

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Paymaster General whether he now has any plans to seek to make the code of practice on the employment of disabled people mandatory.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We have no present plans to do so.

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Paymaster General if the Government have any plans to ratify the International Labour Organisation's convention No. 159 concerning vocational rehabilitation and employment of disabled people.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: As my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister informed the hon. Member on 18 January at column 237, the decision not to ratify convention No. 159 was announced by my right hon. Friend, the then Secretary of State for Employment, by way of a White Paper (Cmnd. No. 9417) which was laid before Parliament on Friday 21 December 1984. In this White Paper the Goverment outlined clear reasons why it was unable to proceed with ratification. The Government's position remains unchanged.

Community Programme (Deaf People)

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Paymaster General what assistance has been provided to enable deaf people to go on the community programme; and how many deaf people have participated in each of the last three years.

Mr. Alan Clark: Separate information on the number of deaf people on the community programme is not held. However, all projects employing and benefiting disabled people, including deaf people, are welcomed and encouraged. Because of the particular difficulties faced by disabled people in finding employment, the period of unemployment required to qualify for the community programme is reduced.

Local Enterprise Agencies

Mr. Pike asked the Paymaster General how many local enterprise agencies are established, at the latest date for which figures are available; and what percentage of them receive financial support from local authorities.

Mr. David Trippier: According to my Department's records, there are currently 308 established local enterprise agencies. But no records are maintained on the number supported by local authorities. However the latest directory of enterprise agencies (May 1985) produced by Business in the Community, suggests that at least 169 LEAs are supported (either in cash, or kind, or both) by local authorities. This represents 55 per cent. of the total number of established LEAs as recorded by my Department.

Youth Training (East Midlands)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Paymaster General how many people are currently on youth training schemes in Leicester and in the east midlands.

Mr. Trippier: At the end of October, the latest date for which statistics are available, there were 2,627 young people in training on the youth training scheme in the Leicester local authority district and 24,376 in training on the scheme in the east midlands.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Paymaster General how many people have completed youth training schemes in Leicester and the east midlands to date.

Mr. Trippier: Since the start of the youth training scheme, 2,176 young people have completed the scheme in the Leicester local authority district and 26,867 in the east midlands. In addition, 2,665 young people in Leicester, and 32,066 in the east midlands, left before completing their full entitlement to training.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Paymaster General whether he has any information as to the number or percentage of young people who found work following the successful completion of youth training schemes in Leicester and in the east midlands; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The Manpower Services Commission conducts a regular follow-up survey of young people some three months after they leave the youth training scheme. The latest survey results cover young people who left the scheme during April and May 1985. These show that 80 per cent. of those completing their training in the Leicester local authority district, and 71 per cent. in the east midlands, were in employment. Comparable figures for all leavers were 70 per cent. in the Leicester local authority district and 67 per cent. in the east midlands.

Although these figures only cover a two-month period, they are a clear indication of the advantages and benefits to young people of taking part in the youth training scheme.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Winnick asked the Paymaster General if, following the answer on 25 November to the hon. Member for Walsall, North regarding unemployment statistics, he will give so much of the information requested in the original questions as was not included in the reply.

Mr. Alan Clark: The answer of 25 November included all the available information requested in the original questions. Increases in unemployment since 1979 are not available for the black country as defined in the answer, because comparable data are not available, following the introduction of the ward-based system for allocating claimants to locations and the change in boundaries of travel-to-work areas. My Department has recently made available estimates of the number of unemployed in the United Kingdom and in each region, which takes account of all the discontinuities in the collection process since 1971. However, it would not be practical to extend these calculations to smaller areas.

SCOTLAND

Young Persons (Detention)

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many persons under 16 years of age were detained in institutions for over-16s or in police cells in each of the last five years.

Mr. John MacKay: The information in relation to the numbers of under-16s received into penal establishments is as follows:

	Convicted	Remanded
1980	6	157
1981	3	134
1982	12	147
1983	9	144
1984	6	137

Similar information in relation to detention in police cells is not available centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Prosthetic and Orthotic Aids

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what recommendations of the Denny working party report 1972 on prosthetic and orthotic aids have been implemented; which remain to be implemented; and what progress can be expected towards bringing the recommendations fully into force;

(2) what recommendations of the Denny working party report 1972 on prosthetic and orthotic aids have not been accepted; and why.

Mr. John MacKay: The report "The Future of the Artificial Limb Service in Scotland" (the Denny report) was published in 1970. In the following year, the then Secretary of State for Scotland announced in Parliament his acceptance of the report.

The report contained about 40 recommendations. Many of these related to matters of good practice, which have been recommended to health boards. By and large, the major recommendations have now been implemented. The hon. Member may wish to write to me if he has a particular interest in any specific proposal.

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will devolve to local health boards clinical and financial responsibility for prosthesis.

Mr. John MacKay: Health boards already have clinical and general management responsibility for the prosthetic service, and financial responsibility for all related matters except the prostheses themselves.

A92 (Ellon-Bridge of Don)

Mr. Bruce asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many deaths or serious injuries occurred on the A92 Ellon-Bridge of Don road in 1965, 1970, 1975, 1980 and each subsequent year to date.

Mr. Ancram: The number of reported deaths and serious injuries arising from road accidents on the A92 Ellon-Bridge of Don road since 1979 was as follows:

	1979	1980	1981	1982	1983	1984
Fatalities	4	2	1	—	7	2
Serious injuries	23	26	15	14	14	24

Because of changes in the extent of information collected and technical difficulties, figures prior to 1978 are not available.

Mr. Bruce asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many accidents have been reported on the A92 Ellon-Bridge of Don road for five-year intervals from 1965 to the latest available date.

Mr. Ancram: The number of reported injury road accidents from 1979 was as follows:

	1979	1980	1981	1982	1983	1984
Fatal	4	2	1	—	6	2
Serious	15	18	14	11	9	10
Slight	33	34	24	30	21	32
Total	52	54	39	41	36	44

Because of changes in the extent of information collected and technical difficulties, figures prior to 1978 are not available. The figures do not include information on accidents involving vehicle damage only, which is not held centrally.

Mr. Bruce asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many vehicles a year have used the A92 Ellon-Bridge of Don road for five-year intervals from 1965 to the latest available date.

Mr. Ancram: The approximate annual flows of vehicles on the A92 Ellon-Bridge of Don trunk road, based on single counts in specific census years, have been as follows:

Year	Number of vehicles
1965	1,441,000
1971	2,014,000
1975	2,549,000
1979	2,933,000
1985	3,508,000

Examinations

Mr. George Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the number of appeals made to the Scottish Examinations Board against awards made in the 1985 Scottish certificate of education examinations which were submitted because of disruption to teaching prior to 1 April.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The number of appeals submitted on grounds of disruption to teaching prior to 1 April was 9,758.

Mr. George Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the proportion of A passes in the awards made in 1985, 1984, 1983 and 1982 in the Scottish certificate of higher grade examination.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The information requested is as follows:

Year	Percentage of band A passes on higher grade* per cent.
1985	11·2
1984†	11·4
1983†	11·5
1982†	11·1

* Post appeal; all subjects; all candidates.
† Source: The Scottish Examination Board's reports for 1982, 1983 and 1984.

Mr. George Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many appeals were received by the Scottish Examinations Board against the awards in the 1985 Scottish certificate of education examinations; of them how many were successful; and what are the comparable statistics for 1984, 1983, 1982 and 1981.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The information requested is as follows:

Year	Total appeals	Number of appeals which resulted in upgrading	Percentage of success rate per cent.
1985	31,570	9,582	30·35
1984*	23,826	9,027	37·89
1983*	22,360	8,349	37·34
1982*	24,208	8,493	35·08
1981*	22,650	7,981	35·27

* Source: The Scottish Examination Board's reports for 1981, 1982, 1983 and 1984.

The figures for 1985 are not directly comparable with those for 1981 to 1984 because of the extended arrangements which operated in 1985 to help candidates who had lost teaching time as a result of the teachers' dispute, and because in many cases Ex 4 order of merit forms were not submitted by schools in support of appeals which necessarily gave the board a less secure basis of evidence on which to work. The following analysis of the figures for 1985 is therefore relevant:

	Total	Number of appeals which resulted in upgrading	Percentage of success rate per cent.
Normal appeals	21,812	6,836	31·34
Appeals under extended arrangements	9,758	2,746	28·14
Total	31,570	9,582	30·35
Appeals supported by Ex 4	14,600	5,498	37·66
Appeals in which Ex 4 was lacking	16,970	4,084	24·14
Total	31,570	9,582	30·35

Scottish Examinations Board

Mr. George Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland on how many occasions in the last six years he has made directions to the Scottish Examinations Board under section 129(2) of the Education (Scotland) Act 1980.

Mr. Allan Stewart: My right hon. Friend has not in the last six years made any formal directions to the board using these powers.

Mr. George Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the budget of the Scottish Examinations Board devoted to public information; and what publications are presently available outlining the method of working of the board.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The actual expenditure of the board on publications in 1983 and 1984 was £12,143 and £13,058 respectively. The board's approved estimate for 1985 is £23,920 which includes £10,000 for publicity in relation to the new standard grade courses. Publications presently available which outline the board's method of working are listed in appendix B (page 258) of the "Scottish Certificate of Education Examination Conditions and Arrangements 1986", a copy of which I have placed in the Library of the House.

Additionally, the board issue letters, circulars, explanatory material and exemplars as necessary to all education authorities and presenting centres. Copies of these are available to other interested bodies and individuals on application to the board.

Mr. George Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will arrange for the Scottish Examinations Board to publish for the public an outline of its procedures in awarding passes in the Scottish certificate of education.

Mr. Allan Stewart: My right hon. Friend has taken this up with the board.

Mr. George Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will place in the Library a copy of the letter of 15 November 1979 from the Scottish Examinations Board outlining the board's awarding procedures.

Mr. Allan Stewart: My right hon. Friend has done so.

Nuclear Reprocessing Plant, Dounreay

Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met representatives of the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority to discuss the proposed reprocessing plant at Dounreay.

Mr. Ancram: Neither my right hon. Friend not I have had any such meeting.

Islands Councils (Inquiry)

Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total cost to public funds of the inquiry into the functions and powers of the islands councils, under the chairmanship of Sir David Montgomery.

Mr. Ancram: The travel costs and other expenses of the committee of inquiry amounted to £8,683. It is not possible to identify separately the costs incurred by my Department in supplying general secretarial and support services, or by other public bodies giving evidence.

Cancer

Mrs. McCurley asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the incidence of cancer in Scotland.

Mr. Younger: A major document—the "Atlas of Cancer in Scotland 1975-1980"—was published today by the World Health Organisation's International Agency for Research on Cancer and the Cancer Registries of Scotland. I have arranged for copies to be placed in the Library. The Atlas is the first in the world showing national incidence of cancer. Twenty common and 19 less common cancers are mapped by local authority district and the rates compared with those of other countries. Scotland has some high rates, particularly of lung cancer, which are cause for concern. Those forms of cancer most prevalent in Scotland seem to be associated with tobacco, spirits and diets with an excess of fat and a deficiency of fresh vegetables and other fibre. Much remains to be known about the causes of cancer, but I am satisfied that measures which are already the subject of Government action in the health education field—on smoking, drinking and diet—would, if heeded by the public, lead to significant reduction in our cancer rates. Government funding of research into the causes, prevention, management and cure of cancer will continue at its present high level, and I would expect the research needs identified in the Atlas to form the basis of new and productive research in the years ahead.

Fire Services (Discipline)

Mr. Henderson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he proposes to issue guidance to the fire service in Scotland on the procedures to be followed under the Fire Services (Discipline) (Scotland) Regulations 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Younger: I have today placed in the Library a copy of the guidance to be issued to firemasters. This guidance, like the regulations themselves, has been the subject of consultation with fire authorities, representative bodies in the fire service and the national joint councils. It represents the agreed procedure for handling cases under the regulations and is designed to assist fire authorities and members of brigades to achieve uniformity of practice and natural justice in disciplinary matters, consistent with the needs and traditions of the fire services.

DEFENCE

Aeronautical Quality Assurance Directorate

Mr. Shersby asked the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received from the hon. Member for Uxbridge concerning alternative uses for the premises occupied by the Aeronautical Quality Assurance Directorate at Harefield; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: My hon. Friend has made a number of representations, both in person and in writing, to me on this subject and has asked me to consider the possibility of further use of the site by the Ministry of Defence or other Government agencies, or its early disposal for alternative use. All these possibilities are being considered.

On present plans, there will continue to be a quality assurance presence at Harefield until late 1987, albeit on a smaller scale than before.

NATO (Ammunition)

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for Defence if, before the placing of orders for ammunition from companies in North Atlantic Treaty Organisation countries, any inquiries are made about the use of military conscripts in factories competing agaist United Kingdom suppliers.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I will answer shortly.

NATO (Reserves)

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the restructuring of reserves in North Atlantic Treaty Organisation.

Mr. Stanley: Reserve forces committed to NATO by Alliance members are organised on a national basis. As far as the United Kingdom reserve forces are concerned, the Government's policy is to expand both their numbers and their roles as a highly cost-effective contribution to our overall defence capability as detailed in paragraphs 446-51 of the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1985"—Cmnd. 9430-1.

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has as to the percentage of North Atlantic Treaty Organisation forces which are trained reservists.

Mr. Stanley: Figures relating to active duty military manpower, civilian manpower and committed reserves of NATO allies are contained in the United States Defense Secretary's annual report to Congress on "Allied Contributions to the Common Defense". A copy of the 1985 report has been placed in the Library.

Cyprus Secrets Trial

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether the seven acquitted defendants in the Cyprus Official Secrets Act trial will receive all pay and allowances due to them for the period between their arrest and their acquittal; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley [pursuant to his reply, 22 November 1985, c. 354]: Yes.

Colombia (Rescue Operations)

Mr. Beith asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether there were any delays in RAF flights to Colombia to assist in rescue operations as a result of difficulties in negotiating overflying rights; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley [pursuant to his reply, 26 November 1985, c. 564]: I refer the hon. Member to the replies that I and my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office gave on 25 November to the hon. Member for Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley (Mr. Foulkes) at columns 418 and 512.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Intergovernmental Council

Mr. McCusker asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many meetings have taken place under the auspices of the Anglo-Irish Ministerial Council during the current year at which matters which are the responsibility of Northern Ireland Government Departments were discussed; what matters were thus discussed; and what conclusions were reached.

Mr. Tom King: Four meetings of Ministers have taken place this year, under the auspices of the Anglo-Irish

Intergovernmental Council, to discuss matters which are the responsibility of Northern Ireland Departments. They are:

15 March 1985: Belfast
Lord Lyell, Under-Secretary of State, Northern Ireland Office, and Republic of Ireland Minister for Agriculture (Mr. Deasy).

26 March 1985: Dublin
Mr. Nicholas Scott, Under-Secretary of State, Northern Ireland Office, and Republic of Ireland Minister for Education (Mrs. Hussey).

7 August 1985:
Mr. Christopher Patten, Under-Secretary of State, Northern Ireland Office, and Republic of Ireland Minister for Health and Social Affairs (Mr. Desmond).

11 September 1985:
Lord Lyell, Under-Secretary of State, Northern Ireland Office, and Republic of Ireland Minister for Fisheries and Forestry (Mr. O'Toole).

Matters of mutual concern were discussed at each meeting.

Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Conference

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if a decision has been made about the location of the premises in which the proposed Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Conference will meet.

Mr. Tom King: Article 3 of the agreement envisages that the conference will meet in different forms. All meetings will not, therefore, necessarily be held in the same premises.

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if the proposed Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Conference will have authority to discuss United Kingdom and Western Alliance defence installations with Northern Ireland.

Mr. Tom King [pursuant to his reply, 21 November 1985, c. 265]: No. The agreement does not relate to defence matters.

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what will be the postal address of the proposed secretariat of the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Conference;

(2) where is the location of the proposed secretariat of the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Conference.

Mr. Tom King [pursuant to his reply, 21 November 1985, c. 265]: It is expected that the secretariat will be located in Belfast.

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if Her Majesty's Government expect any financial support from the Government of the United States of America to be available for Northern Ireland in the context of the proposed Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Conference; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tom King [pursuant to his reply, 21 November 1985, c. 265]: The Government of the United Kingdom have not received any formal offers of financial support from the Government of the United States of America to be available in Northern Ireland in response to the signing of the Anglo-Irish agreement. But the President has said that he will be working closely with Congress in a bipartisan effort to find tangible ways for the United States to lend practical support to this important agreement. I welcome this response, but I cannot anticipate what the outcome will be.

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what will be the respective proportionate contributions towards the costs of operation of the Secretariat of the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Conference by the two Governments involved.

Mr. Tom King [pursuant to his reply, 21 November 1985, c. 265]: Both Governments will contribute to the costs of operating the secretariat, if the Anglo-Irish agreement is approved by Parliament. Financial details remain to be finalised.

Public Libraries

Mr. Maginnis asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish figures showing expenditure in real terms on public libraries in Northern Ireland as a whole, and for each education and library board since 1978; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The information is as follows:

£ million

	1978-79	1979-80	1980-81	1981-82	1982-83	1983-84	1984-85
Belfast	5·88	5·45	3·94	3·46	2·96	3·31	3·12
North-Eastern	3·41	3·10	2·56	2·40	2·44	2·37	2·39
South-Eastern	3·33	3·01	2·50	2·28	2·18	2·56	2·45
Southern	3·54	3·40	3·22	2·52	2·44	2·32	2·39
Western	3·35	3·32	2·82	2·35	2·22	2·12	2·22
Total	19·51	18·28	15·04	12·99	12·24	12·68	12·57

Note: These figures include expenditure on the schools library service which cannot be separately identified.

The reductions in library expenditure as expressed in real terms is due in part to declining capital expenditure where boards have in general accorded highest priority to the schools sector. Recurrent expenditure has also declined in real terms and again this reflects each board's local determination of priorities having regard to the total resources available and competing demands from other sectors.

Air Rifle Clubs

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list all registered air rifle clubs in Northern Ireland, detailing when they received their certificates of authorisation, the location of their aproved ranges or proposed ranges and the number of club members.

Mr. Scott: [pursuant to his reply, 27 November 1985]: There are seven authorised air rifle clubs with a total membership of 162. Certificates of authorisation are renewed every three years and all seven air rifle clubs received their original authorisations before 1970. For reasons of security, I do not wish to detail their names and the locations of their ranges.

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list all those registered air rifle clubs which submitted their rifles for safe keeping to the Royal Ulster Constabulary at any stage in the past 17 years, indicating (a) whether the rifles were submitted voluntarily, (b) when they were submitted, (c) when they were returned, (d) whether licence fees were paid in respect of the rifles while in Royal Ulster Constabulary keeping and (e) when those rifles not yet returned will be returned.

Mr. Scott [pursuant to his reply, 27 November 1985]: One authorised air rifle club voluntarily gave its weapons to the Royal Ulster Constabulary for safe keeping on 9 September 1985. Licence fees have not been paid by that club as they are not required by virtue of article 33(2) of the Firearms (Northern Ireland) Order 1981. The Royal Ulster Constabulary has also been holding, for safe keeing, air weapons which were voluntarily surrendered to it on 12 February 1974 by a club which is no longer authorised under the Firearms (Northern Ireland) Order 1981. Licence fees have been paid for those weapons. In both cases it is not possible to say when the air weapons will be returned to their owners. For reasons of security, I do not wish to detail the names of the clubs.

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list those air rifle clubs, or proposed clubs, which have had applications for certificates of authorisation refused at any stage in the past 16 years, indicating whether and when such refusals were ever revoked.

Mr. Scott [pursuant to his reply, 27 November 1985]: During the past 16 years 23 air rifle clubs have applied for authorisation by the Secretay of State. All have been refused, and no refusals have been revoked. The years of their refusals are:

Year	Number
1977	11
1978	1
1979	4
1980	4
1982	1
1983	1
1985	1

For reasons of security, I do not wish to list their names.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Public Expenditure (Benefit Take-up)

45. Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what level of take-up of means-tested benefit was used as an assumption in setting the public expenditure totals for future financial years.

Mr. Major: Forecasts of expenditure on means-tested benefits are not based on any explicit assumption that a specified proportion of those entitled to a benefit will actually claim it. Rather, they are based on changing trends in the actual number of beneficiaries, and thus take account of changes in take-up only implicitly.

Benefits (Cost)

46. Dr. Twinn asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the total cost to the Exchequer in respect of benefits whose value is linked to the cost of living, of each 1 per cent. increase in the rate of inflation.

Mr. Newton: The cost of each 1 per cent. increase in those benefits which the Government are committed to increase in line with the cost of living would be about £240 million in a full year.

Doctors (Computers)

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if the issue of computers to doctors by a medicines manufacturer supplying the National Health Service, the name of the company having been sent to him by the hon. Member for Brent, South, is within the code of practice and the voluntary price regulation scheme operated by his Department.

Mr. Whitney: We understand that the company issued some computers on loan to doctors in furtherance of work which they were doing on its behalf. My officials will discuss this matter with the company concerned when next they meet to discuss pharmaceutical prices, costs and profits to confirm that the cost may properly be reflected in the prices of National Health Service medicines. The code of practice is concerned with marketing and is administered by the Association of the British Pharmaceutical Industry.

Orthotic and Prosthetic Aids

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has as to the provision made for research and development of new orthotic and prosthetic aids in the public and private sectors, respectively; what information he has as to the cash outlays made in each category over the last five years; what new aids have emerged on the market as a result; and how the research and development is monitored.

Mr. Newton: Information about the progress in each year of research and development work (R and D) which would benefit the disabled carried out on behalf of any Minister of the Crown is collected by the Department and published in the report to Parliament under section 22 of the Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons Act 1970. These reports include work on the development of new prosthetic and orthotic aids. Details of R and D in the fields commissioned directly by any Department are also published annually in the DHSS handbook of research and development. These commissions, which include the support of research units at bioengineering centre University College London, orthotics research and locomotor assessment unit and Chailey heritage, are let under the auspices of the supply research liaison group. This is a body of senior officials and outside advisers who are responsible for determining the needs and approving the research. Individual projects are monitored by departmental officials.

The cash outlay on R and D into artificial limbs and external orthoses in each of the last five years was:

1980-81	586,000
1981-82	1,068,000
1982-83	1,412,000
1983-84	1,382,000
1984-85	1,333,000

This was almost wholly spent in public sector establishments.

New aids which have resulted from the commissioned research are the swivel walker, hip guidance orthoses, Cherwell orthoses, moulded seating, external fracture fixator, rapid-form socket manufacture for artificial limbs.

In addition, some limb manufacturers undertake research and development which is in part financed by the Department through the contracts let for the supply of artificial limbs. The expenditure borne by the Department for this purpose was in the years concerned:

1980	370,000
1981	585,000
1982	665,000
1983	672,000
1984	1,083,000

Successful development by these manufacturers—not necessarily related to the expenditure in the years listed — are the myoelectric hand, lightweight modular artificial legs, moulded plastics feet and a moulded four bar knee unit.

We have no information about other R and D provision in the private sector.

Widows (Maternity Allowances)

Mr. Lofthouse asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to introduce legislation to allow women widowed during pregnancy or shortly after childbirth to receive maternity allowances; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Edgbaston (Mrs. Knight) and the hon. Member for Liverpool, West Derby (Mr. Wareing) on 28 October 1985 at column 386.

Blood and Blood Products

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services to what extent the number of blood donors supplying the transfusion service has changed over the last year; and what assessment he makes of the effect on the number of donors of fear of catching, or passing on, acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

Mr. Hayhoe: Records of the number of donors are not kept centrally, and the frequency of donation varies. The latest figures available from the National Blood Transfusion Service on the number of donations obtained in England and Wales are as follows:

	Number
Quarter ending September 1983	528,972
Quarter ending December 1983	530,165
Quarter ending March 1984	567,796
Quarter ending June 1984	525,934
Quarter ending September 1984	521,307
Quarter ending December 1984	543,589
Quarter ending March 1985	*538,493
Quarter ending June 1985	*525,591

* Provisional.

It is not possible to identify the reasons behind such minor fluctuations as have occurred. We have, however, taken every opportunity to reassure the public that there is no risk of contracting AIDS from giving blood.

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many haemophiliacs have (a) been identified as carriers of HTLV III virus, (b) contracted acquired immune deficiency syndrome and (c) died as a result of treatment with contaminated blood products.

Mr. Hayhoe: Of the 2,570 haemophiliac patients so far tested, 906—35 per cent.—have been reported positive for HTLV III antibody. Although the test does not detect the virus itself, it is believed that most antibody-positive patients will be carriers of the virus.

According to reports received by the communicable disease surveillance centre, by the end of October, eight haemophiliac patients had developed AIDS, all of whom had died.

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he anticipates that synthetic Factor VIII will be available for clinical use.

Mr. Hayhoe: It is not possible to forecast how long it will take to develop genetically-engineered Factor VIII into a viable commercial product.

AIDS

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, how widely the Health Education Council leaflet promoting awareness of the risks of acquired immune deficiency syndrome has been distributed.

Mr. Hayhoe: 654,000 copies of the leaflet have been distributed through health education units, voluntary sector bodies, employers, health professionals and other organisations. A reprint of 300,000 copies is in progress.

Mr. Kirkwood: asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, what has been the expenditure of central Government and each regional health authority for each of the years since 1981 on all aspects of treatment and prevention of acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

Mr. Hayhoe: Expenditure on treatment or prevention of acquired immune deficiency syndrome — AIDS — is not separately recorded in health authority accounts and details of spending by individual regional health authorities are not therefore available. In the current financial year, the Government have so far allocated some £2 million towards the cost of treatment and prevention of AIDS. The main expenditure has been on the development and evaluation of screening tests, £880,000, additional allocations to the three Thames regions where most cases are currently occurring, £680,000, and to haemophilia reference centres, £90,000, grants to the Haemophilia Society, £47,000, and the Terrence Higgins Trust, £35,000, and funding for a public health education project £100,000. In addition the Medical Research Council has received a total of £431,000 for research into AIDS.

Benefit Statistics

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, what are his latest estimates of the average, maximum and minimum times it takes to process a claim for (a) child benefit, (b) family income supplement, (c) unemployment benefit and (d) supplementary benefit.

Mr. Newton: The information is as follows:

Benefit	Processing time (Working days)
	Average	Minimum	Maximum
Child Benefit
Straightforward claims (computer processed)	5	5	10-14
Non-straightforward claim (manually processed)	21	5-9	n/a
Family income supplement	15	3	n/a
Supplementary benefit	8	n/a	n/a

Comparable figures for unemployment benefit are not available. 35·2 per cent. of unemployment benefit claims result in a payment within six days: 76·2 per cent. result in a payment within 12 days.

Parliamentary Constituencies

Mr. Coombs asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the shire counties, London boroughs and metropolitan boroughs in England in ranking order according to the degree by which their electorates vary from the nationally averaged electorate appropriate to the number of parliamentary constituencies within them.

Mr. Whitney: The information requested is given in the following table:

Area	1985 electorate	Average electorate per constituency
		Number	Percentage difference from national average
England	35,938,491	68,716
Isle of Wight	97,614	97,614	42·1
Wiltshire	404,946	80,989	17·9
Gloucestershire	394,620	78,924	14·9
Dudley	234,694	78,231	13·8
Harrow	156,443	78,222	13·8

Benefits

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many claims for unemployment benefit were disallowed on availability grounds in 1979, 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983 and 1984 and at the latest date for which figures are available; and whether these claimants are included in the overall unemployment totals.

Mr. Newton: The information available is given in the table. Claimants who are disallowed unemployment benefit on availability grounds are included in the unemployment totals if they continue to sign on as unemployed.

Single-Parent Families

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the total number of single parent families for each of the years 1979, 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983, 1984, and at the present time.

Mr. Whitney: Estimates based on information from the 1981 census and the general household survey are available from 1979 to 1982:

One-parent families, Great Britain

Year	Number (thousands)
1979	840
1980	870
1981	900
1982	930

Note:
A one parent family comprises a lone parent with one or more dependant children aged under 16 or 16-18 and in full-time education.

Supplementary Benefits

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give details of the total cost of mortgage interest payments in respect of supplementary benefit recipients for each of the years 1979, 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983 and 1984.

Mr. Newton: Information is not available in the precise form requested. The estimated amount of money added in the assessment for mortgage interest and ground rent, together with the number of claimants for each year from 1979 is as follows:

Year	Claimants	Amount added in assessment (£ million)
1979	98,000	31
1980	134,000	71
1981	196,000	124
1982	235,000	170

Salmonellosis

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will request district health authorities, whenever there is an outbreak of salmonellosis or other bacterial food poisoning in hospital, to send to his Department the most recent copy of the environmental health officer's report on the hospital.

Mr. Hayhoe: Urgent consideration is being given to the guidance issued to health authorities on issues relating to food hygiene. The point raised by the right hon. Member and any recommendations in the forthcoming report of the Stanley Royd inquiry will be taken into account in developing procedures health authorities will be expected to follow in the event of any future outbreak.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people were reported ill in hospital outbreaks of salmonellosis and other bacterial food poisoning in England and Wales in the six years 1979 to 1984; and if he will give the figures for each year by type of hospital.

Mr. Whitney: The information available from reports to the communicable disease surveillance centre is given in the table:

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many inpatients died because of salmonellosis or other bacterial food poisoning in the six years 1979 to 1984; and if he will give separate figures for each year.

Mr. Whitney: The table shows the numbers of deaths which occurred in National Health Service and non-NHS hospitals in England and Wales where the underlying cause of death was salmonellosis or other bacterial food poisoning (International Classification of Diseases (ICD) 9th revision 003 and 005) for the latest six years.

These statistics relate to persons who died in hospital; the location of the patient at the time of the acquisition of the infection is not known to the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys.

AIDS Project (Manchester)

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has formed an initial assessment of the grant application concerning the proposed Manchester AIDS project; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: The co-ordinator of the Manchester AIDS project has been advised in the first instance to discuss financial support with the regional and district health authorities which have powers to give grants to projects serving a local area. My officials have expressed a willingness to discuss the project further with the project steering committee depending on the outcome of these local discussions.

Acute Psychiatric Beds

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what guidance he issues to regional and district health authorities about the provision of acute psychiatric beds; and whether the planning norms have been amended recently.

Mr. Whitney: Since March 1983 we have made available to health authorities a policy paper which brought together existing DHSS advice on a range of topics including planning guidelines. As regards the latter, it indicates that local circumstances will determine needs, which should be discussed locally with the professional people involved, but suggests that district analysis on these lines is likely to show a need for acute psychiatric beds in the range of 0·3/0·5 per thousand population in most districts.

Our officials first wrote to regional health authorities in 1982 to advise them that experience suggested that the tentative guideline of 0·5 per thousand, mentioned in the 1975 White Paper, was often too high for present psychiatric practice; they cited one regional health authority which had worked with a guideline of 0·35.

The hon. Member will find the current version of the policy paper is produced as annex 1 to the Government response to the Social Services Committee report on community care published on 20 November—Cmnd. 9674.

Board and Lodging (Statutory Instruments)

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the title, number printed and cost of printing each of the booklets accompanying the April, October and November statutory instruments on board and lodgings.

Mr. Newton: The April 1985 regulations were accompanied by the booklet "Supplementary Benefit Board and Lodging Areas". 4,700 free issue booklets were printed at a total cost to the Department of £10,107. 1,000 HMSO books were also printed with a sale price of £6·40 a copy.

The October 1985 regulations included the booklet "Supplementary Benefit Board and Lodging Areas (second edition)". 3,850 free issue booklets were printed at a total cost to the Department of £5,748·84. 800 HMSO books were also printed with a sale price of £7·00 a copy.

The November 1985 regulations included the booklet "Supplementary Benefit Maximum Amounts, Initial periods and Board and Lodging Areas". 3,700 free issue booklets were printed at a total cost to the Department of £2,660. 1,100 HMSO books were also printed with a sale price of £7·00 a copy.

Note 1: Free issue booklets were provided by the Department for use in local DHSS offices and by recipients of the statutory instrument.

Note 2: The printing cost of all three priced books were borne by Her Majesty's Stationery Office with recovery in the usual way from proceeds from sales.

Fraud Investigators

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if any remuneration, additional to basic rates of pay, is offered to fraud officers, special investigators or specialist claim control officers on the basis of success rates or productivity.

Mr. Major: No.

Renal Dialysis

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many kidney dialysis machines there are per 1,000 of the population in each district health authority.

Mr. Whitney: The numbers of kidney dialysis machines in use in each health district are not recorded centrally. Information on the numbers of patients being treated by haemodialysis by each renal unit was given by my hon. Friend the Member for Oxford, West and Abingdon (Mr. Patten) in his reply to the hon. Member for Truro (Mr. Penhaligon) on 25 June at columns 378-382. We would expect an individual machine to be provided for each patient dialysing at home, but machines provided for hospital dialysis might be used by several patients.

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people died of kidney failure in each district health authority for each year from 1979 to date.

Mr. Whitney: Deaths from nephritis, nephrotic syndrome and nephrosis — ICD 9th revision 580-589, OPCS code F350—for health authorities for 1980-83 are shown in tables 4 or 5 in Mortality Statistics, Area, DH5 series, copies of which are in the Library. These figures represent the major component of deaths that will end with renal failure. A slightly smaller number of deaths are certified to renal failure without mention of antecedent disease — chronic renal failure ICD 585, and renal failure, unspecified ICD 586 — but these are not available on the published microfiche because of the restricted cause list used. These figures can be produced only at disproportionate cost.

Mortality statistics are derived from the underlying cause of death, which is the disease or condition initiating the sequence of events leading to death. There will be an appreciable number of deaths where renal failure occurs as a terminal event of a disease, such as diabetes, where it is not classified as the underlying cause.

Social Security Review

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will be publishing a range of illustrative figures showing the effects of the proposals of the social security review in the proposed White Paper or separately from it.

Mr. Newton: Illustrative figures will be published with the White Paper. The form of publication is not yet decided.

Health and Personal Social Services (Statistics)

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he is now able to give figures for 1984 to update table 3.14 a of health and personal social services statistics for England 1982;

(2) if he will update table 3.1 of health and personal social services statistics for England 1982 by giving figures for 1981 to 1983 and such figures as are available for 30 March 1985.

Mr. Whitney: I shall let the hon. Member have replies as soon as possible.

Severe Disablement Allowance

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will classify awards of severe disablement allowance to (a) men, (b) single women and (c) married women according to whether they (i) were exempt from the 80 per cent. test on the grounds of age, (ii) were passported to the 80 per cent. test or (iii) passed the 80 per cent. test.

Mr. Newton: The information as at 19 November is as follows:

	Men	Single and divorced women and widows	Married women
Exempt from disablement condition (under 20 when incapacity arose or claim links with non-contributory invalidity pension or housewives non-contributory invalidity pension)	1,708	1,234	207
Passported to disablement condition	248	176	1,425
Disablement condition satisfied	141	74	641
	2,097	1,484	2,273

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many (a) favourable and (b) unfavourable decisions on applications for severe disablement allowance have been made to date.

Mr. Newton: 5,854 and 4,311 respectively, as at 19 November.

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will classify refusals of severe disablement allowance to (a) men, (b) single women and (c) married women according to the following reasons: (i) over pension age, (ii) not incapable of work, (iii) failed the 80 per cent. test, (iv) failed residence and presence conditions and (v) other.

Mr. Newton: The available information as at 19 November is as follows:

	Men	Single and divorced women and widows	Married women
Over pension age	208	116	346
Not incapable of work	38	16	58
Disablement condition not satisfied	453	247	1,701
Other	381	217	503
Total	1,080	596	2,635

Separate information is not available on the number who failed the residence or presence conditions. These cases are included under "other".

Board and Lodging

Mr. Rowe asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what is his best estimate of the numbers of people currently in board and lodging accommodation who will leave their present accommodation as a result of the coming into force on 28 April 1986 of the maximum prescribed in the regulations;

(2) what is his best estimate of the numbers of people currently in board and lodging at rates above the maximum prescribed in the regulations.

Mr. Newton: Information is not available in the precise form requested. However, I assume that my hon. Friend is concerned with the position of people in receipt of supplementary benefit as boarders at 28 April 1985 who received transitional protection for one year of the amount in payment at that time. The object of such protection was to give the people concerned ample time to make alternative arrangements. However, if for any reason anyone who received protection for a period up to a year has difficulty in meeting his charges as a result of the ending of protection at the end of April next year, it is open to local authorities, charitable bodies or others to top up the then prevailing maximum without affecting the claimant's benefit. My right hon. Friend also now has power, in circumstances of exceptional hardship, to extend the period of transitional protection beyond one year.

Mr. Rowe asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many establishments offering board and lodging currently charge more than the prescribed maximum.

Mr. Newton: I regret that it is not practicable to give this information, since it would involve, among other things, establishing the charges of every hotel in the country.

Attendance Allowance

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when the hon. Member for Birkenhead can expect a reply to the letter he wrote to the Minister for Social Security, the hon. Member for Braintree (Mr. Newton) on 9 November 1984 on attendance allowance and which he has followed up by telephone calls and copied the original letter on 19 October 1985.

Mr. Newton: I wrote to the hon. Member on 26 November and regret the error which has led to the earlier delay in replying to him.

Pharmacists (Contracts)

Mr. Oakes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what future discussions are planned with the pharmaceutical services negotiating committee on the implementation of the new contract;

(2) if he will, in this Session of Parliament, introduce legislation to implement the new contract negotiated with the pharmaceutical services negotiating committee.

Mr. Hayhoe [pursuant to his reply, 27 November 1985]: There are no present plans for discussions with the Pharmaceutical Services Negotiating Committee specifically on implementation of the new contract. Full implementation of the agreement must await the necessary primary legislation which will be introduced as soon as possible.

Dental Charges

Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he has any plans to alter the charge system for patients who receive dental treatment under the National Health Service;

(2) what recent representations he has received supporting changes in the charge system for dental treatment under the National Health Service;

(3) if he has made any estimate of the percentage level at which a proportional charge system would have to be levied for dental treatment under the National Health Service in order to raise the same level of revenue as is guaranteed by the current system of dental charges; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe [pursuant to his reply, 27 November 1985]: Representations have been received mostly from dentists, about the present system of dental charges. These include suggestions for a return to the previous system, a wholly proportional system and a system under which dentists would fix their own charges, but there would be a state subsidy for basic treatment.

If a wholly proportional system had been introduced on 1 April 1985, the level of charge necessary to raise the required level of revenue would have been 72 per cent. The desirability of changing the current system will be considered when charges are next reviewed.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Banks (Lending Activities)

6. Mr. Hickmet asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the implications of the use by banks of note issuance facilities, revolving underwriting facilities, note purchase facilities and similar instruments in connection with their lending activities for the Bank of England's supervision of their prudential lending limits; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Bank supervisors must ensure that the acceptance of new types of risk is properly controlled —without unreasonably inhibiting market development. I understand that the Bank of England takes account of these instruments in monitoring bank risk—asset ratios.

Value Added Tax

15. Mr. Cash asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will seek to raise the threshold for value added tax to £50,000.

Mr. MacGregor: The European Commission sixth VAT directive restricts increases in the VAT registration threshold to those which maintain its original value in real terms. The Government consider the directive unduly restrictive and are pressing for an amendment to allow member states greater flexibility in determining their threshold.

21. Mr. Heathcoat-Amory asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from the building trade about the value added tax threshold.

Mr. Moore: Eleven since the last Budget, of which seven advocated a reduction or the abolition of the VAT threshold.

25. Mr. Tom Cox asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussion he has had with officers of the Central Council of Physical Recreation about representations they have made seeking a reduction in the amount of value added tax now being paid by sports associations.

Mr. Brooke: The council was consulted by Customs and Excise about proposals by the European Commission for directives on VAT which, if adopted, could affect among other matters the VAT payable by non-profit-making sports organisations. The council's views have been noted.

Manufacturing Industry

16. Mr. Wrigglesworth asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the extent of the decline in manufacturing output since May 1979.

Mr. Lawson: Manufacturing output has fallen by 8 per cent. since May 1979 but non-manufacturing output has risen by 11½ per cent. and GDP as a whole has risen by 6¼ per cent.

Firemen (Bounty Payments)

17. Sir David Price asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer why the Inland Revenue has decided that bounty payments for long service for retained firemen on the completion of 10, 15, 20, 25, 30 and 35 years of qualifying service should be taxable, when comparable bounty payments to members of the Territorial Army Volunteer Reserve are free of tax.

Mr. Moore: If a retained fireman or any other employee receives a bounty payment, it is part of the income from his employment and taxed accordingly.

Exceptionally, the training bounty paid to members of the Territorial Army Volunteer Reserve is exempted from tax by legislation introduced in 1947.

Pound Sterling (Value)

18. Mr. Ron Brown asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the current value of the pound sterling in real terms compared to its value in 1979.

Mr. Ian Stewart: In real terms, the sterling index averaged 112·1 in 1979 and 117·2 in august 1985.

Exchange Control Act 1947

19. Mr. Couchman asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will propose the repeal of the Exchange Control Act 1947 in the next Finance Bill.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I have noted my Hon. Friend's suggestion. He will recall that exchange controls were abolished in 1979 and the Act has been inoperative since then.

Employees (Profit Sharing Schemes)

20. Mr. Kenneth Carlisle asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many companies have now registered profit sharing share schemes for the benefit of their employees.

Mr. Moore: A total of 1,001 employee share schemes have been approved by the Inland Revenue. Some 507 are profit sharing schemes and 494 are saving-related share option schemes. Some companies have established both types of scheme.

Nationalised Industries (Sale)

22. Mr. Alton: asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any plans for spending the revenue raised from proposed sales of nationalised industries.

24. Mr. Wallace asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any plans for replacing the income brought in by nationalised industries now privatised.

Mr. MacGregor: The effect of privatisation on public finances is one of the many factors that my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer takes into account in his Budget judgment.

41. Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the loss of revenue to his Department from the sale of publicly owned state assets since 1979.

Mr. Moore: It is not possible to estimate the overall effect on Government revenues of the privatisation programme since 1979. It is not known what the effect on public finances would have been if the privatised businesses had remained within the public sector. In so far as the performance and profitability of these businesses improves in the private sector, they are likely to pay additional tax.

Johnson Matthey Bankers

23. Mr. Skinner asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent discussions he has had with the Governor of the Bank of England regarding the state of Johnson Matthey Bank; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor meets the Governor regularly for confidential discussions about a wide range of matters.

32. Mr. Flannery asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information was available to him on the position of the Johnson Matthey Bank when a decision was made to effect a rescue operation.

Mr. Ian Stewart: As my right hon. Friend the Chancellor told the House on 17 December last year, at column 23, the Governor notified him of the action which the Bank intended to take shortly before the rescue of JMB was announced.

Unit Labour Costs

26. Mr. Norman Atkinson asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he makes of the contribution made by unit capital cost to unit labour costs.

Mr. MacGregor: Unit capital costs do not contribute directly to unit labour costs, but the two are related through substitution between capital and labour. However, short term movements in unit labour costs are mainly affected by other determinants, in particular by what happens to pay.

Public Sector Pay

27. Mr. Wainwright asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on his Department's performance in keeping public sector pay rises within his guidelines.

Mr. MacGregor: Our policy for public sector pay has been and remains that it should reflect the need to recruit, retain and motivate staff of the calibre required within what can be afforded.

South-west Cumbria

28. Mr. Franks asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the amount of new finance available to south-west Cumbria as a result of his autumn statement.

Mr. MacGregor: The information requested is not yet available. The autumn statement included an overall figure for local authority relevant current spending. The grant-related expenditure assessments for different authorities are currently being determined and the details will be announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment next month.

City of London (Insurance)

29. Mr. Ashdown asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the annual level of invisible earnings from the insurance sector of the City of London for the latest available year.

Mr. Ian Stewart: In 1984 net overseas earnings by United Kingdom insurance institutions were £1,585 million.

Income Tax

30. Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on his proposals to cut the basic rate of income tax.

Mr. Moore: My right hon. Friend will consider all the options for income tax changes at the appropriate time.

36. Mr. Terry Lewis asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer in what circumstances he expects to be able to announce tax cuts in the next Budget.

Mr. Moore: A forecast for the economic prospects for 1986 was published in the autumn statement which was laid before the House on 12 November by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer. The scope for changes in tax rates and allowances will be assessed in the run-up to the next Budget. My right hon. Friend will announce any such changes in his Budget statement.

38. Mr. Yeo asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he will publish his Green Paper on the reform of personal income taxation.

39. Mr. Tim Smith asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects to publish the Green Paper on the reform of personal taxation.

Mr. Moore: We expect to publish the Green Paper, within the next few months. It will discuss a number of personal tax issues in addition to the tax treatment of husband and wife.

Inflation

31. Mr. Leigh asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the current rate of inflation.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer my right hon. Friend gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley (Mr. Foulkes).

Economic Strategy

33. Mr. Hoyle asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he next plans to meet the Confederation of British Industry to discuss his economic strategy.

Mr. MacGregor: My right hon. Friend will discuss his economic strategy at the meeting of the National Economic Development Council on 4 December.

Scientific Research

34. Mr. Patrick Thompson asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if, in the next public expenditure White Paper, he will provide a specific programme collating all Government expenditure on scientific research.

Mr. MacGregor: The next public expenditure White Paper will organise spending primarily by Department. A full analysis of expenditure on research 1981-82 to 1986-87 is provided in table 2.1 of the annual review of Government funded research and development 1984, which is available in the Library. Paragraph 1.6 and 1.7 of that report explain the basis on which the figures have been prepared. The 1985 annual review will be published around the end of the year.

Economic Progress

35. Mr. Pike asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer to what extent the measures announced in the autumn statement are designed to reduce the gap in the different economic conditions in the north and the south of the United Kingdom.

Mr. MacGregor: All regions in the United Kingdom will benefit from the 3·5 per cent. real increase in economic activity expected this year and the further 3 per cent. increase expected in 1986.

Heritage Assets (Taxation)

37. Mr. Nicholas Baker asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will bring forward proposals to lessen the impact of capital taxation on heritage assets.

Mr. Moore: The capital taxes code already has provisions to lessen its impact on heritage assets. We have made a number of improvements in recent years, but if my hon. Friend has any suggestions for further improvement I shall be glad to consider them.

Pensions

40. Mr. Stern asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the implications for pensions policy of recent proposals by the Centre for Policy Studies for the liberation of individual pension funds, a copy of which has been sent to him; and if he will arrange for the Treasury to initiate a detailed study of the economic and revenue implications of such proposals.

Mr. Moore: We shall carefully consider the recent proposals published by the Centre for Policy Studies.

Regional Policy

42. Mr. Holt asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what aspects of his Department's fiscal policy are intended specifically to assist deprived regions.

Mr. MacGregor: Our fiscal policies are intended to promote sustained economic growth throughout the country. Specific assistance for such regions is not generally provided through the tax system, but in other ways. Special tax provisions do however apply in enterprise zones.

Customs and Excise (Prosecutions)

Mr. Ashdown asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many individuals under arrest or facing prosecution under the Customs and Excise Management Acts were also working for other Departments of the United Kingdom Government at the time the alleged offences were committed.

Mr. Brooke: This information is not collected centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Motor Tax

Mr. Ron Brown asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total amount raised in motor tax in the financial year 1984-85.

Mr. Brooke: I assume the hon. Member is interested in all the main indirect taxes on the purchase and use of motor vehicles. Receipts in 1984-85 were as follows:

	£ million
Car tax	744·7
Value added tax	*2,850·0

	£ million
Excise duty on petrol	†4,680·5
Excise duty on derv	†1,190·0
Vehicle excise duties	†2,219·0
	11,684·2

*Estimate based on consumers' expenditure on new and used cars, petrol and other motoring expenses, and business expenditure on cars (the VAT on which is non-deductible).

†Includes road freight, buses and coaches.

Trustee Savings Bank

Mr. Canavan asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received about the Trustee Savings Bank since the Scottish court decision that the Trustee Savings Bank Scotland belongs to its depositors; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: A small number of letters. As the House will be aware, formal notice of appeal has been lodged and the matter is therefore sub judice.

Government Expenditure

Mr. Adley asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the net change in total Government expenditure as between 1979-80 and the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. MacGregor: Between 1979-80 and 1985-86 the public expenditure planning total has increased by £57 billion in cash terms. As a proportion of GDP, public spending increased from 43½ per cent. in 1979-80 to 46 per cent. in 1982-83, but has been falling since then, to 44½ per cent. in the current year and it is projected to fall further, to 41 per cent. in 1988-89.

Futures (Taxation)

Mr. Maples asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he is satisfied with the way in which the Inland Revenue is administering the taxation provisions in relation to futures; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moore: Yes. Section 72 of this year's Finance Act provides—as proposed in my right hon. Friend's Budget speech—that profits on transactions in commodity and financial futures previously assessed under case VI of schedule D should be assessed to capital gains tax. However, it made no change where the taxpayer enters into such transactions in the course of a trade, in which case any profits remain liable to income tax or corporation tax under case I.

Whether in any particular instance the activities of a taxpayer amount to trading will turn on the facts of the matter as well as on the law. But in general a taxpayer, whether an individual or company, would not be regarded as trading in respect of transactions which were relatively infrequent or, for example, where the intention was to hedge specific investments; and an individual is unlikely to be regarded as trading as a result of purely speculative transactions in futures.

EC Budget Council

Mr. Thurnham asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will report on the outcome of the latest meeting of the European Community's Budget Council.

Mr. Brooke: The Budget Council met in Brussels on 26-27 November to consider the European Parliament's amendments and modifications to the draft budget for 1986 which the Council established in September.

The Council established by qualified majority a revised draft budget amounting in total to some 34·6 billion ecu (some £21·6 billion at the budget exchange rate of 1·61 ecu to the £) in commitment appropriations and some 32·7 billion ecu (some £20·3 billion) in payment appropriations.

The revised draft budget, like the September version, provides for limiting the growth of agricultural market support expenditure in the existing 10 member states within the budget discipline guideline and for 567 million ecu (some £350 million) of agricultural guarantee expenditure in Spain and Portugal. It includes 1,400 million ecu (some £870 million) for the United Kingdom's VAT abatement.

The European Parliament's proposals called for additions of some 1·8 billion ecu to the payment appropriations for non-obligatory expenditure in the Council's September draft budget. The Council decided to respond by proposing to limit these additions to 821 million ecu, comprising 321 million ecu on account of enlargement, 400 million ecu for the so-called "cost of the past" overhang of past commitments in the regional development and social funds, and 100 million ecu in other budget lines.

The growth of non-obligatory expenditure compared with 1985 implied by these proposals is 1,210 million ecu (some £750 million) for commitment appropriations and 1,200 million ecu (some £745 million) for payment appropriations. The implied new "maximum rate" increases are some 14·6 per cent. for commitment appropriations and some 20·5 per cent. for payment appropriations.

Two member states, the United Kingdom and Ireland, for different reasons, opposed the revised draft budget, but were outvoted. I argued that, while it was axiomatic that the understandings on budgetary matters reached with Spain and Portugal during the accession negotiations must be fully respected, the Council should not propose special extra provision for the cost of the past" problem, which should be solved by reducing new commitments rather than increasing payments. The increase in non-obligatory expenditure proposed for this purpose represented a threat to budget discipline.

On food aid, the Council accepted the Parliament's proposal for establishing a new budget line for emergency food aid relief within the food aid chapter of the budget and reaffirmed its commitment to review the Community's food aid arrangements in the light of need.

The European Parliament will consider the Council's revised draft budget in the week beginning 9 December.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Soil Research Survey

Mr. Dalyell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proposals he has to make 27 members of the Soil Research Survey of England and Wales redundant; what consultation has taken place with them; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Fenner: In January this year my right hon. Friend announced that, following a review of needs and priorities in relation to soil research, my department's funding of the soil survey of England and Wales would remain unchanged in 1985-86 but would be reduced to about half its current level in 1986-87. This decision, which reflected the advice of the Priorities Board, also took account of my right hon. Friend's view that the soil survey had the capacity to develop its funding from commercial activities. My Department is in close touch with the soil survey on these matters and I understand that income from commercial work is rising. It is for the soil survey and the Agricultural and Food Research Council to determine the level of staffing in the survey in the light of the resources available from all sources.

Shardlow Hall Laboratory

Mr. Lawrence asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how the work done at Shardlow Hall agriculture laboratory compares with that of other Agriculture Development Advisory Service laboratories in England and Wales in each of the past three years.

Mrs. Fenner: The types of work undertaken at Shardlow Hall are similar to those undertaken at the other ADAS regional centres and subcentres in England and Wales, but are not comparable with the work undertaken by the central science laboratories or veterinary laboratories.

Mr. Lawrence asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which will be the nearest laboratory, following the proposed closure of Shardlow Hall Agriculture Development Advisory Service laboratory, to which farmers in the Burton constituency may go for a milk test.

Mrs. Fenner: After closure of the ADAS laboratory at Shardlow Hall, the nearest laboratory to Burton providing similar services will be at Wolverhampton.

Food (Nutrition Labelling)

Mr. Gregory asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the implications of the proposed introduction of statutory fat content nutrition labelling for intra-Community barriers to trade raised by other European Community member states in relation to exports of food products.

Mrs. Fenner: Any proposals that I may make for fat labelling of food will be discussed with representatives of the European Commission in Brussels, and implementation of such proposals would take place in the light of those discussions. I have no indications at the present that other member states would take action against our exports if imports from them were required to carry fat labelling.

Dumping at Sea

Mr. Hancock asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) how many licences for dumping toxic wastes at sea have been issued in the last five years;

(2) how much and what type of toxic waste has been dumped at sea in the last five years.

Mr. Gummer: With certain exemptions, which are codified in the Deposits in the Sea (Exemptions) Order 1985, all disposals to sea require a licence. Toxicity tests are undertaken whenever appropriate, and over the last five years 350 licences have been issued following such tests, permitting the disposal of 25·6 million tonnes of waste. Within this total 332 licences and 3·1 million tonnes related to industrial wastes, and 18 licences and 22·5 million tonnes to sewage sludge.

TRANSPORT

Mhari L

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Transport why the hon. Member for Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley has not yet received a reply to his question relating to the Mhari L, tabled for priority written answer on 13 November; when he can expect to receive a reply; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: The hon. Member's question was answered on 21 November. I have written to him apologising for the delay.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley on 21 November, Official Report, column 267, why reports on the loss of ships are not published; if he will reconsider his decision not to publish this report; and if he will place a copy in the Library.

Mr. Ridley: Reports of inquiries into shipping casualties are confidential to the Department. They enable the Department to establish the cause of the casualty and to consider what further action is required in the interest of marine safety. However, to be as helpful as possible the Department releases, to interested parties, a factual report based upon the surveyor's findings. I shall send a copy of the report on the Mhari L to the hon. Member.

Channel Link

Sir Fergus Montgomery asked the Secretary of State for Transport if the involvement of British Steel and British Shipbuilders in the Euroroute consortium will affect the financial criteria laid down by Her Majesty's Government that the scheme should be entirely privately financed.

Mr. David Mitchell: No. Their limited involvement has been authorised on the basis that it does not extend to the financing of construction of a Channel fixed link and that it carries no future financial commitment.

M1

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Transport, further to the answer to the hon. Member for Rugby and Kenilworth on 14 November, Official Report, column 262, if he will give the numbers and types of vehicles involved in accidents on the M1 in (a) 1979 and (b) 1984.

Mr. Ridley: Numbers and types of vehicles involved in personal injury accidents on the M1—1979 and 1984:

	1979	1984
Pedal cycles	0	3
Two wheeled motor vehicles	48	59
Cars	1,201	1,389
Buses and coaches	27	26

	1979	1984
Light goods vehicles	105	112
Heavy goods vehicles	413	251
Other motor vehicles	13	11
Other vehicles	4	0
All vehicles	1,811	1,851

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Transport on the basis of the approximate figures given in the answer to the hon. Member for Rugby and Kenilworth on 14 November, Official Report, column 262, if he will give the approximate total cost of adding one lane in each direction south bound of the M1 from its junction with the M6.

Mr. Ridley: On the basis of the approximate figures given to my hon. Friend on 14 November, the basic cost of adding one lane in each direction is likely to be between £200 million and £260 million.

The total cost would be increased by factors such as the need for retaining walls and railways diversions along certain stretches and the provision of structures, but it is not possible to estimate the effect of these without detailed investigation.

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Transport further to his reply to the hon. Member for Rugby and Kenilworth dated 14 November, Official Report, column 262, when his review of the carrying capacity of the M1 is likely to be completed.

Mr. Ridley: The carrying capacity of the M1 is under review, not in isolation, but as part of the wider examination of motorway capacity announced in "National Roads England 1985" which is aimed at identifying stretches that may need relief or widening by the end of the century. At this stage, it is not possible to predict how long the work will take to complete.

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Transport, further to his reply to the hon. Member for Rugby and Kenilworth dated 14 November, Official Report, column 262, what plans exist for improving road safety on that section of the M1 motorway between junction 4 and junction 13.

Mr. Ridley: A number of measures are planned which should contribute to greater safety. They include renewal and enhancement of signs, improvements to the traffic capacity of slip roads and extra safety fencing.

Mr. Harrison asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many closed-circuit television cameras are installed on the M1 motorway between Wakefield and London; and what are their specific purposes.

Mr. Ridley: No closed circuit television cameras are installed on the M1 motorway.

Traffic Statistics

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Transport by how much road traffic is forecast to increase by the year 2000 in (a) England, (b) urban areas, (c) Staffordshire and (d) Stoke on Trent.

Mr. Ridley: The Department produces high and low national traffic growth forecasts representing a range of economic assumptions. Local forecasts down to district level are derived from the national figures: road traffic is forecast to increase by between 15 per cent. and 35 per cent. in England up to 2000. The figures for Staffordshire county are 18 per cent. and 39 per cent. and these also apply to the Stoke-on-Trent city council area. No separate aggregate forecasts covering urban areas as a whole are available.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Transport what proportion of the traffic in the latest traffic survey of the A50 passing through the Meir at Stoke on Trent, was (a) cars, (b) vans and (c) lorries; and what has been the increase in the number of vehicles in each of the categories passing through the Meir along the A50 at peak weekday hours over the last (a) five years and (b) 10 years.

Mr. Ridley: The latest traffic survey was carried out in September 1985 by Staffordshire county council during peak hours. The previous comparable survey was carried out in June 1979 by Stoke county council. The results are set out in the table:

	Total Cars	Light Vehicles (up to 30 cwt)	Heavy Vehicles (over 30 cwt)
1979	1139	1115	224
1985	1853	1473 185	195
Per cent change	+38	+49	−13

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Transport on how many occasions his Department has been given, or made estimates of, future traffic flows on the A50 through the Meir, Stoke on Trent; who made the estimates; and if he will list all the estimates for traffic flows at the peak weekday times for the years between 1990 and 2000, giving the date when each estimate was made.

Mr. Ridley: Estimates of future traffic flows on A50 were originally prepared for the public consultation exercise in 1976 on the alternative routes for a southern bypass of Stoke. These have since been updated to reflect both changing traffic patterns and revisions to the national traffic growth forecasts.

Traffic figures in the form requested by the right hon. Member are not available, but the following information may be helpful.

Year of estimate	1979	1983	1985
Estimated flows in
1990	27,100-30,900	27,100-30,900	23,400-26,000
1995	28,500-33,700	28,500-34,000	24,500-28,600
2000	29,500-35,800	29,500-36,900	25,300-30,800

These figures show the average flows for a 16-hour period in the month of August, using low and high growth assumptions. Peak hour flows can be broadly taken as 10 per cent. of the above figures.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is the current average weekday traffic flow at the peak time on the A50 where it passes through the Meir in Stoke on Trent; and if he will give the figures for each of the past 10 years.

Mr. Ridley: I shall answer this question shortly.

Underpasses

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many underpasses he has sanctioned in the last year in urban areas; how many were (a) two-lane and (b) three-lane; and what were the estimated peak hour traffic flows for each underpass for the years at the end of the century.

Mr. Ridley: I have sanctioned four such underpasses in the last year. Further details of these are as follows:

Scheme	Standard	Estimated peak hour traffic flows	Design year
A406-Great Cambridge Road (A10) Greater London	Dual 2 lane	*3,000	1988
A40 Ealing, Western Circus, Greater London	Dual 2 lane	*4,800	2006
A12 Hackney Wick —M11 Link Greater London	i. Dual 2 lane ii. Dual 3 lane	3000 4,000	2001 2001

* These figures do not take account of the New National Traffic Forecasts.

Bypasses

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the factors taken into account when decisions are made regarding the justification for bypasses.

Mr. Ridley: Before a scheme is admitted to the national road programme, I must be satisfied that it meets the objectives of the programme which are set out in "National Roads England 1985". Bypasses are then assessed on economic and environmental grounds. The economic factors taken into account are summarised in our two-part booklet "Getting The Best Roads For Our Money". The environmental factors are set out in our "Manual of Environmental Appraisal". Copies of these departmental publications are available in the House of Commons Library.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Transport at what stage of his Department's consideration of the Stoke southern bypass it became unjustified in the opinion of his Department; and for what reasons.

Mr. Ridley: It has been apparent for some time that the Stoke southern bypass was becoming increasingly difficult to justify in economic terms. Staffordshire county council's plans to build a Longton-Fenton bypass at about the same time as the southern bypass significantly added the doubt. However, further traffic data were assembled and analysed as agreed at the meeting between my hon. Friend the Minister of State and representatives of the local authorities in July 1984. This led to the decision announced following the further meeting with the local authority representatives on 16 October 1985 that we could not proceed now with a southern bypass of Stoke.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many major bypasses he has approved in the last year; where they are; what was the estimated traffic flow for each by the end of the century measured in terms of vehicles per day and vehicles per hour at peak time; and if he will give similar estimated figures for the Stoke southern bypass.

Mr. Ridley: I have approved 23 bypasses in the last year. Further details of these are as follows:

Scheme (Location)	Traffic Flow vehicles per day	Design Year
A43 Brackley Bypass (Northamptonshire)	13-22,000	2002
A43 Bulwick Bypass (Northamptonshire)	8-10,000	2001
A43 Towcester Bypass (Northamptonshire)	16-24,000	2002
A47 Billesdon Bypass (Leicestershire)	8-10,000	2001
A52 Bingham Bypass (Nottinghamshire)	10-12,000	2003
A1 Clifton-Stanning Bridge (Northumberland)	*21-26,000	2001
A19 Riccall and Barlby Bypass (North Yorkshire)	*5-12,000	2002
A616 Stocksbridge—M1 (South Yorkshire)	*8-18,000	2002
A65 Settle and Giggleswick Bypass (North Yorkshire)	*4-11,000	2002
A21 Pembury Bypass (North of A264) (Kent)	*28-32,000	2000
A21 Pembury Bypass (South of A264) (Kent)	*19-23,000	2000
A27 Havant-Chichester Bypass (Hampshire and West Sussex)	*23-32,000	2000
A27 Brighton Bypass (East and West Sussex)	*14-50,000	1999
A27 Fontwell Bypass (West Sussex)	*20-26,000	2000
A43/A421 Gosford Bypass (Section of Peartree Hill Wendlebury Oxfordshire)	*22-30,000	2004
A38 Saltash Bypass (Cornwall)	19-25,000	1998
A36 Warminster Bypass (Wiltshire)	10-20,000	1998
A36 Heytesbury Pypass (Wiltshire)	10-12,000	1998
A303 South Petherton-Broadway (Somerset)	16-26,000	1998
A35 Bridport Bypass (Dorset)	*9-12,000	1998
A41 Berkhamsted and King's Langley Bypasses (Hertfordshire)	*13-30,000	2001
A10 Buntingford Bypass (Hertfordshire)	*7-12,000	2001
A12 Martlesham Bypass (Suffolk)	*30-36,000	2003
A435 Evesham Bypass (Hereford and Worcester)	14-18,000	2002
Similar estimated figures for the Stoke southern bypass are below:
Stoke Southern Bypass	8,500-11,000	2004

* These figures do not take account of the New National Traffic forecast.

I do not have readily available the figures for the individual schemes of vehicles per hour at peak time. As a general guide, however, approximately 10 per cent. of daily traffic flow occurs during peak hours.

Stoke-Derby Link

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will place in the Library the consultants' report updating the traffic model on the Stoke-Derby link.

Mr. Ridley: While the work of updating the local traffic model is substantially complete, the consultants' report will not be finalised until early next year. However, I shall ask my hon. Friend the Minister of State to arrange a presentation of the relevant data for the right hon. Member.

British Rail

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will issue a general direction to British Rail that any future fare rises should be restricted to lines or services which have established a 90 per cent. reliability; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: No. It is entirely British Rail's responsibility to determine fares, but we have told the chairman of the railways board that improved efficiency must make a full contribution to keeping fare increases to reasonable levels.

M25 (Construction Defects)

Mr. George Gardiner asked the Secretary of State for Transport what reasons he has been offered by W. S. Atkins and Partners, consulting engineers on the Reigate-Leatherhead section of the M25, for the delay in producing their determination where responsibility for defects in the construction of this section lie.

Mr. Ridley: The consultant has not yet received the required full and detailed particulars of the contractor's claims concerning these.

Docklands Light Railway

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Transport what were his reasons for declining consent for London Regional Transport to lay a private Bill for the eastern extension of the docklands light railway; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: The Government believe that any further investment in the docklands light railway should be privately funded, and that the railway should be owned and operated in the private sector. There are no proposals at present for the private funding of the eastward extension.

Speed Limits

Mr. Higgins asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will replace existing speed limit signs on motorways with signs showing 70 miles per hour.

Mr. Ridley: I have no plans to do so. National speed limits are not generally signed numerically on any roads, including motorways. The current motorway sign, placed only at the entrances to motorways, denotes that the motorway regulations apply; these include the 70 mph limit unless there are specific signs showing a lower limit is in force.

EMPLOYMENT

Labour Statistics

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Paymaster General if he will publish a table showing (a) the number and percentage of jobs lost in the northern region and in Britain between June 1979 and June 1985 in (i) all manufacturing industries, (ii) service industries, (iii) all industries, (iv) shipbuilding and (v) engineering industries and (b) the numbers of long-term unemployed as a proportion of all those in (1) full-time employment and (2) all employment in the northern region and in Britain in June 1979 and June 1985.

Mr. Alan Clark: The following table contains the changes for the areas, dates and categories specified. Separate statistics are available for the shipbuilding and engineering industries only at national level. At regional level they are included in the metal goods, engineering and vehicles industries — division 3 of the 1980 standard industrial classification.

Changes in the numbers of employees in employment between June 1979 and June 1985

	Northern region		Great Britain
	Thousand	Per cent.	Thousand	Per cent.
Manufacturing industries	−125	−31	−1,743	−25
Service industries	−30	−5	+361	+3
All industries and services	−219	−18	−1,812	−8
Metal goods, engineering and vehicles	−60	−33	−781	−23
Shipbuilding and repairing	NA	NA	−51	−36
Mechanical engineering	NA	NA	−250	−24
Electrical and electronic engineering	NA	NA	−104	−14
Instrument engineering	NA	NA	−15	−12

The number of registrants unemployed for over one year in the northern region and Great Britain in July 1979 was 32,521 and 340,543 respectively. The number of claimants unemployed for over one year on this basis for July 1985 was 106,502 and 1,269,286. Figures for long-term unemployment are only calculated quarterly.

It is difficult to make comparisons of long-term unemployment between 1979 and 1985 because of the change in the basis of the count in October 1982, the 1983 Budget provisions which mean that some men, mainly aged 60 and over, no longer need to sign on at unemployment benefit offices to receive benefit, and the change to a ward-based system for allocating claimants to localities.

Mr. Frank Field asked the Paymaster General how many people were in (a) full-time and (b) part-time employment in the Wirral and Chester travel-to-work areas in 1979, and at the latest available date.

Mr. Alan Clark: Comprehensive employment statistics for travel-to-work areas are not available except for dates when censuses of employment are taken. Censuses have been taken triennially since 1978 and the latest results are for September 1981.

Results of the 1978 census of employment are not available for the travel-to-work areas announced last year, but figures for the area covered by the old Chester and Birkenhead travel-to-work areas, which corresponds most closely to the Wirral and Chester travel-to-work area, are as follows:

Employees in employment

Thousands

	Full-time	Part-time	All
1978	146·4	46·3	192·7
1981	140·0	43·4	183·3

More up-to-date employment figures for travel-to-work areas will become available following the publication of the 1984 census of employment in the spring of 1986.

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Paymaster General what is the breakdown of unemployed people (a) by sex and (b) by duration for each of the years since 1979 for the London borough of Wandsworth.

Mr. Alan Clark: The following information is in the Library. The table gives the breakdown of unemployed claimants by sex and duration for October 1984 and October 1985. Statistics of unemployment for local authority districts are derived from the new ward-based system. At present the analysis by duration is only available from April 1984 onwards, but information back to June 1983 will shortly be available.

Crime Prevention

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many places are currently taken on the community programme for crime prevention projects.

Mr. Alan Clark: I have been asked to reply. Information about numbers on this type of community programme project is not currently available. However, it is being collated as part of the initiative being undertaken with my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary to ensure that worthwhile and practical crime prevention projects are mounted, as the programme expands to 230,000 places. I shall write to my hon. Friend as soon as the information is available.

Ault and Wiborg Paint Factory, Perivale

Mr. Greenway asked the Paymaster General if the Health and Safety Executive is satisfied with the current and proposed standards of health and safety at the Ault and Wiborg paint factory in Perivale; and if will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Health and Safety Executive has required improvements to the standards of health and safety at the factory. When the work is complete, the standards required will have been met.

Pneumoconiosis (Compensation Payments)

Mr. Wigley asked the Paymaster General how many cases have been approved for compensation payments during the past 12 months under the Pneumoconiosis etc. (Workers Compensation) Act 1979; what has been the average payment made in these cases; what is the total number of cases for which payment has been made since this Act came into force; and what is the total compensation paid over the period and the average compensation corresponding to these figures.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The information requested is as follows:

	Approved applications	Total paid £	Average payment £
1 November 1984 to 31 October 1985	67	427,956	6,387
4 July 1979 to 31 October 1985	4,527	26,359,136	5,823

I would also like to take this opportunity to correct the figures I gave in my reply to the question on 10 July 1985 at column 465. The figures for the period 4 July 1979 to 30 June 1985 should have read:

	Approved applications	Total paid £	Average payment £
	4,488	26,088,388	5,813
and not
	4,488	27,037,524	6,024

Sunday Trading

Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Paymaster General, pursuant to his reply of 22 November, Official Report, column 326, what is his estimate of the number of small businesses which would be affected by the estimated loss of 20,000 retail jobs following the deregulation of Sunday trading.

Mr. Alan Clark: We are not in a position to make such an estimate. The study by the Institute for Fiscal Studies which indicated that up to 20,000 jobs may be lost did not make any estimate of the number of small businesses which could be affected.

Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Paymaster General, pursuant to his reply of 22 November, Official Report, column 326, what information he has as to the percentage of retailers who expect an increase in sales following the deregulation of Sunday trading.

Mr. Alan Clark: A number of retailers have indicated that they expect sales to increase following the deregulation of Sunday trading, but we are not in a position to estimate what proportion of retailers as a whole expect increases.

Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Paymaster General whether he has had any discussions with representatives of the small retail trade or its employees about the employment implications of the deregulation of Sunday trading: and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: We have had no such discussions, but Ministers at the Home Office have met employee representatives.

Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Paymaster General, pursuant to his reply of 22 November, Official Report, column 326, what assumptions are made in the estimate that 22,000 new jobs could be generated following the deregulation of Sunday trading as to the relative growth of small retail outlets on the one hand and larger retail concens on the other.

Mr. Alan Clark: We are not in a position to make such an estimate. The Institute for Fiscal Studies who suggested that a 2 per cent. increase in sales may lead to an additional 22,000 jobs did not allocate these new jobs between firms of different sizes.

Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Employment if, pursuant to his reply of 22 November, Official Report, column 326, he will list those reasons not specified in that answer as to why he regards as pessimistic the assessment that 20,000 jobs could be lost following the deregulation of Sunday training.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Institute for Fiscal Studies' assessment takes no account of the fact that some shops already trade on Sunday. Nor did it take into account the possibility that deregulation of Sunday trading may increase jobs in related sectors of the economy.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Advancement of Women

Ms. Jo Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) if he has had any meetings with the Equal Opportunities Commission to discuss the implementation of those parts of the Nairobi conference on forward-looking strategies for the advancement of women relevant to his Department; and if he has any future plans for such meetings;

(2) what steps he is taking to evaluate the progress in implementing those parts of the United Nations Nairobi conference on forward-looking strategies for the advancement of women which apply to his Department; what resources he has allocated to this; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what plans he has for implementing paragraph 58 of the Nairobi conference on forward-looking strategies for the advancement of women, relating to the collection of statistics on the situation of women;

(4) whether he will establish a special office within his Department to monitor periodically and accelerate the process towards the equitable representation of women along the lines of paragraph 88 of the conclusions of the Nairobi conference on forward-looking strategies for the advancement of women.

Mr. Tom King: The final report of the Nairobi conference has only recently become available and I am considering what steps might be appropriate in respect of Northern Ireland.

Women Appointees

Ms. Jo Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list those bodies to which his Department makes appointments, the number of appointees and the number of these who are women.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Teachers' Dispute

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has as to the incidence of the practice of schoolchildren, some of whose teachers are on strike, being sent off school premises during periods in school hours when their teachers are not available; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Keith Joseph: I have seen many reports of children being sent home or otherwise excluded from school premises because their teachers are taking disruptive action. Detailed information is however not available. I deplore any interruption of pupils' education arising from industrial action; apart from its effect on pupils' education and the deplorable example it sets, it results in inconvenience to both pupils and parents; harms relationships, behaviour and discipline; and risks children's safety and well-being. I look to local education authorities and schools to continue taking all possible measures to fulfil their responsibilities to the children in their care.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his response to the letter which he has received from the general secretary of the Professional Association of Teachers urging him to take measures to end the present teachers' dispute.

Sir Keith Joseph: I am considering the letter which I have received from Mr. Peter Dawson, the general secretary of the Professional Association of Teachers, dated 20 November. I hope to reply shortly and the hon. Member may then wish to approach Mr. Dawson to see whether he is willing to release the content of my reply.

University Teacher Training Courses

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what reply he has sent to the letter which he has received from the general secretary of the National Association of Head Teachers about the shortfall in applications for university teacher training courses.

Sir Keith Joseph: I received the letter referred to by the hon. Member on Tuesday 26 November and will be replying in due course.

Guidance Notes

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he intends to take to monitor the extent to which the guidance notes to local education authorities issued by his Department have been complied with.

Sir Keith Joseph: There is no intention to monitor the extent to which local education authorities comply with the guidance notes. These notes are only a guide to the Education (Mandatory Awards) Regulations, and have no statutory authority.

Student Awards

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he plans to re-establish his Department's former policy of publishing the breakdown of the main rates of grants allocated to university students.

Sir Keith Joseph: No.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he plans to amend the current criteria according to which rates of grants for university students are calculated.

Sir Keith Joseph: No.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science by how much he plans to increase the main rate of student grant outside London for the 1986-87 academic year.

Sir Keith Joseph: A statement about the level of student grants for the academic year 1986-87 will be made in the next few weeks.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what progress has been made with his review of student awards at degree and sub-degree level.

Sir Keith Joseph: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Hornchurch (Mr. Squire) on 19 November 1985 at column 120.

Students (Residence Costs)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will seek to amend section 8 of the Rent Act 1977 in respect of lettings to university students by educational institutions with a view to reducing board or residence costs incurred by students.

Sir Keith Joseph: No. The Government's policy is that charges for educational residential accommodation, which need to cover specified running costs, should be determined by the institutions concerned.

Advancement of Women

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he is taking to evaluate those parts of the United Nations Nairobi forward-looking strategies for advancement of women which apply to his Department; what resources he has allocated to this; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: The Government have made it clear on many occasions that it is essential to ensure that equal curricular opportunity is genuinely available at all levels within the education system, and our policies for education will continue to reflect that commitment to equal opportunities. We shall be considering the education recommendations in the Nairobi strategy document, many of which raise matters which are the responsibility of educational institutions themselves.

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has for the implementation of paragraph 58 of the Nairobi forward-looking strategies for the advancement of women, which calls for the collection of timely and reliable statistics on the situation of women.

Mr. Chris Patten: All regular collections of data about pupils, students, leavers, examination results and teachers provide for separate identification of boys and girls, men and women. Statistical summaries, which normally include separate figures for each sex, are available for departmental consideration within the academic year to which they apply. Subsequent publication retains the distinction when thought to be important.

When ad hoc surveys are undertaken, it is customary to consider whether the design should allow for the preparation of reliable statistics for men and women separately. Such allowance is made in the majority of cases.

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he is taking to seek to ensure that educational programmes enabling men to assume as much responsibility as women in the upbringing of children and the maintenance of the household are introduced at all levels of the educational system, as called for in paragraph 173 of the United Nations Nairobi forward-looking strategies for the advancement of women.

Mr. Chris Patten: Detailed decisions on the curriculum in educational institution are for the institutions themselves. The Government have made it plain that what is taught in schools should be relevant to adult life and that there can be no room for discrimination in the curriculum on grounds of sex. Her Majesty's Inspectorate have recently published a discussion document on home economics in their "Curriculum matters" series: that document takes it as one of its starting-points that home-making is equally important for boys and girls, and that in adult life the responsibilities of family life should be shared so that both men and women have sufficient opportunity to continue their own personal development.

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he is taking to seek to implement paragraph 83 of the Nairobi forward-looking strategies for the advancement of women, calling for new teaching methods which emphasise the equality of the sexes.

Mr. Chris Patten: Decisions on teaching methods and materials are for educational institutions themselves; attention should be given to the expectation and attitudes of girls when reaching those decisions.

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he is taking to diversify women's vocational education and training in order to extend their opportunities for employment in occupations that are non-traditional or new to women, as called for in paragraph 171 of the United Nations Nairobi forward-looking strategies for the advancement of women.

Mr. Chris Patten: The Government will continue to encourage girls and young women to take greater advantage of the full range of vocational education and training which is available. New approaches to education and training in the 14-18 age range are being explored by the technical and vocational education initiative, which is emphasing the need to avoid sex stereotyping; and the Government is seeking in a variety of ways to promote interest among girls and young women in the whole range of employment opportunities.

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what meetings he has had with the Equal Opportunities Commission to discuss the implementation of those parts of the Nairobi forward-looking strategies for the advancement of women; and what future plans he has for such meetings.

Mr. Chris Patten: My right hon. Friend is considering the implications of the Nairobi conference recommendations for Government policies in education, and has not met, or made any plans to meet, the Equal Opportunities Commission. Officials at the commission with responsibility for education maintain regular contact with the Department.

Women Appointees

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish in the Official Report those bodies to which his Department makes appointments and the number of appointees; and if he will specify in each case the number of women appointees.

University Lecturers (Pay)

Mr. Allen McKay asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what assessment he has made of the implications for the morale of university lecturers of current promotion prospects and real salary levels; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Keith Joseph: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him yesterday at column 628.

Mr. Allen McKay asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what has been the trend in university lecturers' salaries in real terms since 1979.

Sir Keith Joseph: I would refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Leeds, North-West (Dr. Hampson), on 19 November at column 127.

Economic Awareness

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the bodies which have made representations to his Department about the introduction of the new subject entitled economic awareness which he is considering introducing into school curricula; and what discussions are presently taking place between officials of his Department and representatives of local education authorities and teachers on this issue.

Mr. Chris Patten: The Department issued earlier this year a consultation letter to interested groups seeking comments on the Government's view that all pupils should be equipped by the age of 16 with some economic awareness and understanding. The letter made clear our view that this objective could be achieved through a wide range of subjects in the curriculum and that translation of the principle into action in the schools was a professional matter for teachers. Responses to the consultation letter have been received from the local authority associations, teachers' organisations, individual local education authorities, employers' groups and individual companies, and from other interested groups and correspondents. These responses are being considered.

Students (Financial Support)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has given any consideration to the possibility of providing financial support for students at the age of 16 years.

Mr. Chris Patten: This is one of many aspects of policy on post-compulsory educational provision which is kept under review. However, the Government have no immediate plans to change the practice of successive previous Governments in regarding young people in non-advanced full-time education as primarily dependent on their parents for financial support until their 19th birthday. Parents receive child benefit in respect of such children, and in addition local education authorities have discretionary powers to pay grants and allowances to those in need.

Teachers (Pay)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has responded to the proposal by local education authorities to establish a national joint council to discuss pay and conditions of service for teachers; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Keith Joseph: Yes. I said as long ago as last March that I am prepared to consider the case for change, but that before coming to a firm view on the matter I should want to be satisfied that any new arrangements would offer the prospect of being a real improvement on the existing ones. I still await the detailed submission of such a case by the local authorities.

Trainees and Students (Status and Income)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what response he has made to the recommendation issued in the 24th Report of the House of Lords Select Committee on the European Communities 1984 (page xxviii) advocating a common status and income approach for all trainees and students.

Mr. Chris Patten: The Government's response to the 24th report of the House of Lords Select Committee on the European Communities 1984 was given in the course of the debate on the report in the other place on 22 October. I draw the hon. Member's attention to what Lord Young of Graffham said about the recommendation for a common status and income for all trainees and students in his closing speech.

Primary Schools (Inner Cities)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what research has been conducted by his Department into methods of raising standards in primary schools in inner city areas.

Mr. Chris Patten: The Government's policy, as set out in the White Paper "Better Schools", is to raise standards in all schools, including primary schools in inner city areas, and a number of research projects currently being funded by the Department will contribute towards that objective. In addition, pilot projects to improve the quality of education in selected primary schools in deprived urban areas have been approved for education support grant starting in 1985-86 in 12 local education authorities. These will cost approximately £3 million and will last from three to five years. Reports on the projects will be available to other schools and authorities.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Luncheon Facilities

Mr. Harrison asked the Lord Privy Seal, how many meals were served in the Westminster Hall cafeteria during the lunch period on 21 November; and how many Members of either House, Officers and staff working within the Palace were unable to be served.

Mr. Biffen: The number of meals served in the Westminster Hall cafeteria during the luncheon period of 21 November was 350. It is impossible to determine how many Members of either House, Officers or others within the Palace were unable to be served.

Mr. Harrison asked the Lord Privy Seal how many meals were served in the Strangers' cafeteria during the lunch period on 21 November; and how many Members of either House, Officers and staff working within the Palace were unable to be served.

Mr. Biffen: The number of meals served in the Strangers' cafeteria during the luncheon period of 21 November was 600. It is impossible to determine how many Members of either House, Officers or others within the Palace were unable to be served.

Mr. Harrison asked the Lord Privy Seal how many meals were served in the Members' cafeteria during the lunch period on 21 November; how many Members of either House and others working within the Palace were unable to be served; and how many strangers were unable to be served.

Mr. Biffen: The number of meals served in the Members' cafeteria during the luncheon period of 21 November was 150. It is impossible to determine how many Members of either House, Officers or others within the Palace were unable to be served.

Mr. Harrison asked the Lord Privy Seal how many meals were served in the Harcourt room during the lunch period on 21 November; and how many Members of either House, Officers and staff working within the Palace were unable to be served.

Mr. Biffen: The number of meals served in the Harcourt grill room during the luncheon period of 21 November was 80. It is impossible to determine how many Members of either House, Officers or others within the Palace were unable to be served.

Mr. Harrison asked the Lord Privy Seal how many meals were served in the Strangers' dining room during the lunch period on 21 November; and how many Members of either House, Officers and others within the Palace were unable to be served.

Mr. Biffen: The number of meals served in the Strangers' dining room during the luncheon period of 21 November was 80. It is impossible to determine how many Members of either House, Officers or others within the Palace were unable to be served.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Compensation

Mr. Tim Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement with regard to the payment of compensation to persons who have been wrongly convicted of criminal offences.

Mr. Hurd: There is no statutory provision for the payment of compensation from public funds to persons charged with offences who are acquitted at trial or whose convictions are quashed on appeal, or to those granted free pardons by the exercise of the royal prerogative of mercy. Persons who have grounds for an action for unlawful arrest or malicious prosecution have a remedy in the civil courts against the person or authority responsible. For many years, however, it has been the practice for the Home Secretary, in exceptional circumstances, to authorise on application ex gratia payments from public funds to persons who have been detained in custody as a result of a wrongful conviction.

In accordance with past practice, I have normally paid compensation on application to persons who have spent a period in custody and who receive a free pardon, or whose conviction is quashed by the Court of Appeal or the House of Lords following the reference of a case by me under section 17 of the Criminal Appeal Act 1968, or whose conviction is quashed by the Court of Appeal or the House of Lords following an appeal after the time normally allowed for such an appeal has lapsed. In future I shall be prepared to pay compensation to all such persons where this is required by our international obligations. The international convenant on civil and political rights [article 14.6] provides that:

"When a person has by a final decision been convicted of a criminal offence and when subsequently his conviction has been reversed, or he has been pardoned, on the ground that a new or newly discovered fact shows conclusively that there has been a miscarriage of justice, the person who has suffered punishment as a result of such conviction shall be compensated according to law, unless it is proved that the non-disclosure of the unknown fact in time is wholly or partly attributable to him".

I remain prepared to pay compensation to people who do not fall within the terms of the preceding paragraph but who have spent a period in custody following a wrongful conviction or charge, where I am satisfied that it has resulted from serious default on the part of a member of a police force or of some other public authority.

There may be exceptional circumstances that justify compensation in cases outside these categories. In particular, facts may emerge at trial, or on appeal within time, that completely exonerate the accused person. I am prepared, in principle, to pay compensation to people who have spent a period in custody or have been imprisoned in cases such as this. I will not, however, be prepared to pay compensation simply because at the trial or an appeal the prosecution was unable to sustain the burden of proof beyond a reasonable doubt in relation to the specific charge that was brought.

It has been the practice sice 1957 for the amount of compensation to be fixed on the advice and recommendation of an independent assessor who, in considering claims, applies principles analogous to those on which claims for damages arising from civil wrongs are settled. The procedure followed was described by the then Home Secretary in a written reply to a question in the House of Commons on 29 July 1976 at columns 328-330. Although successive Home Secretaries have always accepted the assessor's advice, they have not been bound to do so. In future, however, I shall regard any recommendation as to amount made by the assessor in accordance with those principles as binding upon me. I have appointed Mr. Michael Ogden QC as the assessor for England and Wales. He will also assess any case that arises in Northern Ireland, where my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland intends to follow similar practice.

Riot Equipment

Mr. Knowles asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions his Department has had with police authorities and chief constables about the provision of Government funds to buy additional equipment for dealing with riots.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Department's officials and Her Majesty's Inspectors of Constabulary keep in regular contact with chief officers of police about all aspects of the policing of their force areas including the availability of public order equipment. Government funding for properly incurred police expenditure is provided through the normal police grant arrangements.

Mr. Knowles asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the Metropolitan police will be equipped with fireproof overalls and riot helmets with neck protection; and what information he has on plans for chief contables to purchase such equipment.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis informs me that all shield-trained officers in the Metropolitan police have been issued with riot helmets and fire resistant overalls, both which offer some neck protection. All other police forces in England and Wales hold stocks of riot helmets and fire resistant overalls or uniforms. Records of the exact type of protective equipment held by each force are not held centrally.

Young Offenders (Reconviction)

Mr. Terry Lewis asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of all young offenders released from detention centres, and what proportion of juvenile offenders, are reconvicted within two years.

Mr. Mellor: The latest available information relates to reconvictions of those discharged from prison department establishments in 1981 and is published in tables 8(e) and 8.4 of "Prison Statistics England and Wales 1984" (Cmnd. 9622).

Burglary Offences

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the absolute and the percentage increase in the number of offences of burglary recorded by the police between 1979 and 1984.

Mr. Mellor: The number of offences of burglary recorded by the police increased by 348,300 or 63 per cent. between 1979 and 1984. Statistics of offences recorded by the police are published annually in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales" and details of recorded offences of burglary are given in table 2.10 of the latest issue for 1984 (Cmnd. 9621).

Motor Cyclists (Speeding Offences)

Mr. Higgins asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many motor cyclists have been convicted of speeding in the Metropolitan police area in the period in which figures are available.

Mr. Mellor: In 1984, the latest period for which information is available, there were about 1,900 findings of guilt at magistrates' courts in the Metropolitan police district for speed limit offences associated with motor cycles, mopeds and scooters.

Handsworth (Public Disorder)

Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the principal recommendations of the report by the chief constable of the west midlands on the Handsworth riots.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from my hon. Friend the hon. Member for Birmingham, Perry Barr (Mr. Rooker) on 19 November, at column 142.

Victim Examination Suites

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has about which police forces have a victim examination suite in use and those which are planning to open victim examination suites within the next three years.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Metropolitan police plan to introduce a number of victim examination suites consisting of a medical examination room, an interview room and shower facilities. The first such suite should open in Brentford shortly. In other police forces the examination of victims of rape and other sexual assaults is generally conducted in surgeon's rooms or in hospital.

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidelines are being issued to chief constables on the creation of victim examination suites for the victims of rape and sexual assault.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Home Office circular 25/1983 containing general guidance on the treatment of rape victims was issued to chief officers of police in March 1983. Copies are in the Library. It recommended that medical examinations should take place in a proper clinical environment so as to reduce stress and produce an atmosphere of care and concern. The nature of the facilities which are required to meet this is a matter for individual police forces in consultation with police surgeons, taking account of the existing provisions which are locally available.

Civil Disturbances

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has received any formal representations from Mr. W. M. Jadeson, assistant chief constable, Operation South Yorkshire, concerning the police view on civil disturbances; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: No.

Immigration

Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were removed from the United Kingdom as illegal immigrants and overstayers, despite having remained here for over 10 years, in each of the years 1981 to 1985; and if he will make a statement as to his Department' policy towards such long-term overstayers.

Mr. Waddington: The figures requested are not available. The immigration rules provide that in deciding whether to deport an overstayer, full account is to be taken of all the relevant circumstances, with the public interest being balanced against any compassionate factors, including length of residence. Similar considerations apply in deciding whether to remove illegal entrants. Continuous unlawful residence in the United Kingdom amounting to 10 or more years is considered a prima facie reason for allowing a person to remain. Account is also taken of any countervailing factors, such as a criminal record. Each case is considered on its merits.

Mr. Proctor asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will indicate, of the 100,790 visitors from the New Commonwealth and Pakistan in 1983 and the 105,850 New Commonwealth and Pakistan visitors in 1984, how many returned to their own countries at the end of their permitted stay, how many were granted an extension to their initial duration of stay and how many cannot be accounted for.

Mr. Waddington: I shall reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what has been the total number of spouses admitted to the United Kingdom to accompany their immigrant partner in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available;

(2) what has been the average number of children admitted to the United Kingdom to accompany their immigrant parents in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available;

(3) what information he has concerning the average number of wives admitted to the United Kingdom to accompany immigrant husbands in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available.

Mr. Waddington: The available information relates to all children and spouses accepted for settlement on arrival or on removal of time limit and is published annually in "Control of Immigration Statistics, United Kingdom". Figures for the latest 10 years are given in table 14 of the latest issue for 1984, (Cmnd. 9544.).

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has concerning the number of immigrant men who were accompanied on entry into the United Kingdom by one, two or three or more wives in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Waddington: The information requested is not available in this form.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has concerning the number of immigrant parents who were accompanied on entry into the United Kingdom by one, two, three or four or more children in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Waddington: The specific information requested is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. However, information is available on the numbers of children accompanying wives granted entry clearance in the Indian subcontinent for settlement in the United Kingdom: in 1984, 560 such wives were accompanied by one child, 470 by two, 370 by three and 390 by four or more. These figures exclude any children granted entry clearance who were born after their mother lodged her application.

Drug Traffickers (Assets)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions are presently taking place with other countries on arrangements to ensure that court orders made in one jurisdiction over assets belonging to suspected drug traffickers are enforceable in another; what progress has been made so far; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: No detailed negotiations are yet taking place with countries outside the United Kingdom on this matter; but we have it in mind to seek such arrangements once Parliament has had an opportunity to consider the Government's proposals for legislation on the confiscation of drug traffickers' profits.

Prisons (Winson Green and Featherstone)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the maximum of prisoners who are employed in workshops in Her Majesty's prisons Winson Green and Featherstone in any one day.

Mr. Mellor: The maximum number of prisoners employed in workshops in Her Majesty's prison Winson Green on any one day is 157. The maximum number of prisoners employed in workshops in Her Majesty's prison Featherstone in any one day is 266.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many square feet of exercise space are available to prisoners in Her Majesty's prisons Winson Green and Featherstone.

Mr. Mellor: As I stated in my reply to a question from the hon. Member for Birmingham, Erdington, (Mr. Corbett) on 18 November, Winson Green prison, Birmingham, has available 46,000 sq ft in exercise yards and 8,500 sq ft in the gymnasium.

Featherstone prison has available 40,000 sq ft in exercise yards, 6,700 sq ft in the gymnasium and 400,000 sq ft in grassed and hard-surfaced sports pitches.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department for how many hours in the week ended 2 November the workshops in Her Majesty's prisons Winson Green and Featherstone were open; what was the average number of prisoners employed in each establishment; how many classes took place and for how many hours; what was the average number of prisoners in each class; how many individual prisoners attended at least one class during the week; and how much time on average each prisoner spent out of his cell during that week.

Mr. Mellor: In the week ended 2 November one of the two workshops at Featherstone prison was opened for 29 hours. The other workshop was open for 26 hours, having been closed for half a day to enable a security search to be undertaken. The two workshops employ an average of 118 and 134 prisoners respectively. In addition, 222 prisoners were employed on domestic, catering, maintenance and farm duties.

Forty six classes were held during that week with total class hours of 76. The average number of inmates attending each class was nine. One hundred and fifty-nine inmates attended at least one class which represents 34 per cent. of the total population. It is not possible other than at disproportionate cost, to calculate the average amount of time spent out of cells.

The information relating to Birmingham prison was given in a reply to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Erdington (Mr. Corbett) at column 12 on 18 November.

Advancement of Women

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how Her Majesty's Government intend to implement paragraph 58 of the document agreed at the Nairobi conference on forward-looking strategies for the advancement of women, relating to the collection of statistics on the situation of women.

Mr. Waddington: A good deal of relevant statistical information is already being collected by Government Departments and other public bodies. Much of this is published. In addition, the Equal Opportunities Commission regularly publishes, as part of its annual report, a digest of selected statistics to depict the relative position of men and women in British society. The Government are not, therefore, short of statistical material with which to assess progress towards equality between men and women.

Commander P. Corbett (North Devon Trip)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to the status of the trip in a chauffeur-driven car by Commander Phil Corbett of the Metropolitan police to North Devon to meet retired police officer Harry Clement about an interview he had given to the BBC; what was the cost of the trip and the overnight stay of Commander Corbett and his driver.

Mr. Giles Shaw [pursuant to his reply, 12 November 1985, c. 25]: The information requested is as follows:

I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that a visit was made by Commander Corbett to North Devon in the course of operational duties. The visit was authorised by a senior officer in the specialist operations department and cost approximately £77.

NATIONAL FINANCE

EC (VAT Resource Base)

Mr. Forth asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer, on current projects, in which year the value added tax resource base of the European Economic Community will have to be increased beyond 1·4 per cent. to make provision for the projected United Kingdom refund provided for by the Fontainebleau agreement.

Mr. Brooke: The Commission's latest financial forecast indicates that the 1·4 per cent. VAT ceiling should be sufficient to finance all the Community's needs, including the abatement, up to the end of the forecast period in 1988. No forecast has yet been made for later years.

Cable and Wireless

Mr. Ashdown asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total cost of the publicity campaign associated with the sale of the Government's remaining assets in Cable and Wireless.

Mr. Moore: It will not be possible to give the cost to the Government until after the sale is completed.

ENVIRONMENT

Local Authorities (Housing Allocations)

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how the local authority housing allocation for 1986-87 will compare with the current year; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: The total housing investment programme allocations for English local authorities in 1986-87 will be £146 million. The corresponding figures for 1985-86 was £1,600 million. In setting this figure we have taken account of increased spending power from receipts and of the increasing use local authorities are making of other opportunities for capital expenditure.

Canary Wharf

Mr. Mikardo asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the cost to the London Docklands Development Corporation of building the red brick road on Canary wharf and the subsequent costs of relaying this road.

Sir George Young: The cost to the LDDC of building the red brick road on Canary wharf was £474,000, including drainage work and professional fees. This form of construction was chosen to allow the materials to be re-used, if necessary, greatly reducing the cost of any subsequent road on which they are used.

Mr. Mikardo asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what existing firms in Cannon workshops would be required to move out as a result of the proposed Canary wharf development proceeding.

Sir George Young: The existing firms in the new, unlisted part of the Cannon workshops would be displaced by the Canary wharf development. It is the LDDC's intention, however, to ensure that alternative accommodation is made available and that all out-of-pocket expenses incurred as a result of any move are reimbursed.

Housing Defects Act

Mr. Hilton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will include pre-war Laing's Easiform housing in the list of housing types covered by the Housing Defects Act.

Mr. John Patten: No.

Ratcliffe Report

Mr. Speller asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will seek to implement that part of the Ratcliffe report which recommends a time limit for decisions on any planning application.

Mr. Tracey: I am not aware of the report to which my hon. Friend refers. Under section 37 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1971, article 7 of the Town and Country Planning General Development Order 1977 already prescribes such a limit in that where the authority does not give notice of its decision to the applicant within eight weeks from the date when the application was received, or within any extended period agreed between the applicant and the authority, the applicant may appeal to the Secretary of State for a decision.

Housing for the Disabled

Mr. William O'Brien asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what assessment he has made of the implications of implementing circular 26/85, relating to the withdrawal of improvement grants for council house tenants, for the work on the Wakefield metropolitan district council on adaptations to council houses for the disabled and the infirm; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what assessment he has made of the implications for handicapped and infirm council house tenants of implementing circular 26/85 of the withdrawal of improvement grants for council house tenants.

Sir George Young: The circular does not withdraw grants for council house tenants. It does, however, state that, for grants approved on or after 2 December 1985, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will not normally pay Exchequer contribution towards grants where the grant is paid to a tenant of the local authority and the authority intends to pay all or part of that proportion of the cost which is not met by the grant. However, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is prepared to consider individual applications by local authorities for payment of Exchequer contribution.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

English Industrial Estates

Mr. Stephen Ross asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what are his future plans for English Industrial Estates; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. and learned Friend, the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, to my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Staffordshire (Mr. Heddle) on 27 November 1985 at column 880.

Fraud

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he proposes to introduce legislation requiring auditors to report cases of fraud.

Mr. Howard: In the context of financial services this is one of the questions discussed in a consultative document that my Department will be issuing shortly on the role of auditors in that sector. I shall obviously want to consider the responses, but my current view is that much could be done if auditors took a more positive view of their role in relation to the reporting of suspected fraud. I welcome the recent initiatives which the accountancy profession has taken in that direction.

Financial Services and Investor Protection

Mr. Brown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list in the Official Report the names of those organisations which have made representations to him on the White Paper, "Financial Services in the United Kingdom; a New Framework for Investor Protection."

Mr. Howard: Representations on the White Paper "Financial Services in the United Kingdom: A New Framework for Investor Protection" — Cmnd. 9432 — were received from the following organisations and associations:

Associated Scottish Life Offices
Association of British Insurers
Association of Corporate Trustees
Association of Futures Brokers and Dealers
Association of Investment Trust Companies
British Insurance Association
British Insurance Brokers Association
Building Societies Association
British Soluble Coffee Manufacturers Association
City Capital Markets Committee
Confederation of British Industry
Consumers Association
Corporation of Insurance and Financial Advisors
Council for Securities Industry
Friendly Societies Liaison Committee
The Industrial Society
Industrial Life Offices Association
Institute of Chartered Accountants of England, Wales, Scotland and Ireland (jointly) Institute of Chartered Secretaries and Administrators
Institute of Cost and Management Accountants
Life Insurance Association
Life Offices Association
Linked Life Assurance Group
London Commodity Exchange
London Metal Exchange
The Newspaper Society
National Association of Pension Funds
National Association of Security Dealers and Investment Managers
National Consumer Council
National Federation of Consumer Groups
Registry of Life Assurance Commission
Royal Institute of Chartered Surveyors
Society of Company and Commercial Accountants
Society of Investment Analysts
Society of Pension Consultants
The Stock Exchange
Trades Union Congress
Unit Trust Association
Wider Share Ownership Council

Representations were also received from Members of Parliament, Members of the House of Lords, companies and individuals.

High Technology Exports

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many references his officials have made in the past year to United States officials in relation to high technology exports from the United Kingdom where the goods were assembled or manufactured in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Channon: My officials regularly remind United States officials of the Government's continuing objection to United States claims to extraterritorial control over exports and from time to time take up problems which arise. No figures for such references are available.

Turkey (Velvet Imports)

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what agreement has been reached with Turkey regarding an import quota for velvet for 1986.

Mr. Channon: Discussions are in progress between the European Commission and the Turkish authorities concerning voluntary restraint on the export to the Community of a number of textile products including velvet, but agreement has not yet been reached.

Post Office

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has received any representations concerning the implications of the current external financing limit for the capital investment programme of the Post Office; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Geoffrey Pattie [pursuant to his reply, 28 November 1985, c. 625]: I have received no such specific representations. The Post Office did, however, make its views known during the general discussions that it had with my Department about future financing needs.

SCOTLAND

Listed Properties, Eldon Street, Glasgow

Mr. Craigen asked the Secretary of State for Scotland, if he will make a statement on the further representations he has received since the recent meeting between the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Edinburgh, South (Mr. Ancram) and the hon. Member for Glasgow, Maryhill, from Glasgow district council and local residents in the Woodlands area of the city about the retention and improvement for housing of the listed properties at 15, 25 and 35 Eldon street; and what consideration he is giving to local representations on this matter.

Mr. Ancram: Since the meeting referred to by the hon. Member, I have received representations from one resident in the Woodlands area of the city. My right hon. Friend is continuing to give consideration to the future of the site and a decision will be taken shortly.

Legionnaire's Disease, Glasgow

Mr. Martin asked the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to the answer of 14 November, Official Report, column 253, if, in the light of the futher outbreaks of Legionnaire's disease in Glasgow since 14 November, he will reconsider his decision not to establish a public inquiry into the causes of all the recent outbreaks and into means of preventing a recurrence; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: I am confident that the Greater Glasgow health board is well able to carry out the necessary investigations into these regrettable incidents; and that a public inquiry, which would of course impose heavy demands on the experts now dealing urgently with the problem, would add little to what is already known about the source of the infection and the means of preventing a recurrence.

Teacher Training

Sir Hector Monro asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a further statement about the postgraduate preservice training of teachers in Scotland.

Mr. George Younger: Since my previous statement in response to my hon. Friend's question on 27 June 1984, the Government have taken significant steps towards improving the pre-service training of teachers and thus the overall quality of the teaching force. A major development at the start of the 1984-85 academic session was the introduction of new four-year BEd degree courses leading to a qualification for primary teaching, in replacement of the three-year primary diploma courses which are being phased out. The effect will be that primary teaching will in due course become an all-graduate profession.

I have now decided that the other route to teaching in primary schools—the one-year postgraduate courses—should be revised in accordance with the principal recommendations contained in the final report of the working party on primary pre-service teacher training. The length of the courses will be extended from 32 to 36 weeks; the content will be improved to provide a coherent course with three main elements—school experience, professional studies and curriculum studies; and the courses will be externally validated. I consider that it will be practicable to make significant progress along the lines indicated by the working party without any overall increase in resources for education authorities or colleges of education. The colleges have already been given preliminary thought to the introduction of new courses on the basis of the broad guidelines in the report. I hope that they will now submit firm proposals so that the revised primary postgraduate courses may be introduced in the 1986-87 academic session.

In July I received the report of an equivalent working party on secondary postgraduate courses which I established in September 1984. I have arranged for its publication today; copies have been placed in the Library. The main recommendations broadly mirror those of the primary working party, including an extension of the courses to 36 weeks. I welcome these recommendations and am inviting the colleges of education concerned to submit proposals with the object of introducing revised and extended secondary postgraduate courses in the 1987-88 session.

The working party on secondary postgraduate courses recommended in addition that final registration of a secondary teacher with the General Teaching Council for Scotland should be dependent on a further four-week course at a college of education towards the end of the teacher's two-year probationary period. This is a radical suggestion, with implications for primary teachers also, which in my view requires more detailed consideration. I propose therefore to consult interested bodies on support and assessment arrangements for probationary teachers before making any change.

I am very grateful to the members of both working parties for their reports. I am sure that the changes now in prospect will make a further important contribution towards enhancing the quality of teaching in Scottish schools.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Monofilament Drift Nets

Sir David Price asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food why he has rejected the banning of monofilament drift nets as a method of conserving salmon.

Mr. MacGregor: I am not aware of any scientific evidence that would justify the banning of monofilament drift nets because of their effect on salmon stocks. Monofilament drift nets are also used for catching white fish. I consider therefore that the measures announced on 7 November represent the best approach to tightening control over the level of drift net fishing for salmon off the north east coast of England.

Cereals (Co-responsibility Tax)

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the effect on the relative levels of incidence of the co-responsibility tax on cereal producers in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) in other continental countries of (i) the proposed exemption of farmers producing less than 25 tonnes and (ii) the proposed exemption of all inter-farming trade; and if he will make a statement on the implications of the current proposals for United kingdom cereal producers.

Mr. MacGregor: The Commission suggests a co-responsibility levy on sales of cereals off the farm, from which the first 25 tonnes would be exempt. Many details need to be clarified.

No information is available about sales of cereals from individual farms in the Community. But aggregate data provided by the Commission for 1984-85 suggest that about one quarter of cereals production in the EC Ten was not sold off the farm of production: the equivalent figure for the United Kingdom was about one-eighth. If this information is combined with that available from the 1979-80 EC structure survey, it can be estimated that approximately a further quarter of production in the Community of Ten might be exempted by a levy-free allowance of 25 tonnes, compared with roughly one-tenth in the United Kingdom. Thus the proportion of total EC Ten production subject to levy might be about one half compared with about three quarters for the United Kingdom.

I must emphasise that these are very broad approximations dependent on several arbitrary assumptions: they take no account of how producers might adjust the proportion of sales after imposition of the levy. No data are available for Spain and Portugal.

Soil Survey

Mr. Wigley asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he has taken to allow the staff of Soil Survey to seek alternative sources of funding before the cutbacks in resources affect their work.

Mrs. Fenner: In January this year I announced that, following a review of needs and priorities in relation to soil research, my Department's funding of the Soil Survey would remain unchanged in 1985-86, but would be reduced to half its current level in 1986-87. This early notification of the level of funding which will apply next year was intended to give the Soil Survey an opportunity to develop its funding from commercial activities. I understand that the income from such work is rising.

Milk Quotas

Mr. Foulkes asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the quotas on milk production in each European Economic Community country; what quota has been allocated to Spain and Portugal; what is his estimate of total demand in 1986; and what effect the quota allocated to Spain and Portugal will have on excess supply in the European Community in 1986.

Mr. Jopling: The total quota allocated to each member state for 1985-86 is shown in the table below. Spain has been allocated a quota of 5·4 million tonnes. No quota has yet been allocated to Portugal.

The Commission estimates consumption in the present 10 member states at about 85 million tonnes in 1986. The accession of Spain and Portugal is not expected to have a significant effect on the Community's overall milk surplus; Spain is broadly self sufficient in some of the main dairy products and a net importer in others; Portugal is a net importer in most of these products.

Olive Oil

Mr. Foulkes asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the current levels of production and demand for olive oil in the European Community; if he will estimate the increase in production and demand levels which will occur with the accession of Spain and Portugal; and what is the current amount spent on storage and subsequent disposal or sale of olive oil.

Mr. Jopling: 1984/85 Community production of olive oil was estimated at 717,000 tonnes*. 1985/86 production is forecast at 800,000 tonnes†. Demand in the European Community in 1984-85 has been estimated at 947,000 tonnes*. Production in Spain and Portugal in 1984-85 was estimated at 769,000 tonnes*, but a much lower production, probably below 500,000 tonnes† is expected in 1985-86. Demand in Spain and Portugal in 1984-85 has been estimated at 463,000 tonnes*. The 1985 Community budget provided for 22 million ecu for intervention costs.

DEFENCE

Chief Executive, Royal Dockyards

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish in the Official Report a table for the years 1979 to 1985 showing separately by location and distinguishing civilians from naval staff the number of employees falling within the control of the chief executive, royal dockyards.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I shall answer shortly.

American Military Bases

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the number of American military installations, stores and bases in the United Kingdom; and what is the definition of each of these terms used in drawing up the list.

Mr. Stanley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Minister of State for Defence Procurement to the hon. Member for Kingston upon Hull, North (Mr. McNamara) on 27 November at columns 577-8. Main operating bases are permanent large scale operational installations and standby deployment bases are reserve airfields which can be activated in time of emergency and which may be used for exercises at other times.

American Military Personnel

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will detail the numbers of American military personnel currently serving in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Stanley: Approximately 32,000 American military personnel are currently stationed in the United Kingdom.

American National Guards

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Defence if any United States national guards are currently training in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: There are no members of the United States national guards currently training in the United Kingdom.

Nuclear Red Alert Warnings

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many nuclear red alert warnings have occurred in the United Kingdom during the last five years.

Mr. Stanley: I refer the hon. Member to the answer which I gave the hon. Member for Stockton, North (Mr. Cook) on 12 April 1984 at column 355.

Enriched Uranium (Capenhurst)

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Defence for what market highly enriched uranium from the Capenhurst plant is being produced.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I shall reply shortly.

Dockyards (Staff)

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish a table giving for both the Devonport and Rosyth naval complexes, separately for years 1979 to 1985 (a) civilians directly under the cont of the chief executive, royal dockyards, (b) naval st directly under the control of the chief executive, ro dockyards, (c) other Ministry of Defence civilians work exclusively on dockyard work, analysed by organisati (d) other Ministry of Defence civilians working partly dockyard work, (e) other Ministry of Defence civili unconnected with dockyard work, (f) civil servants employed by the Ministry of Defence, analysed organisation within department and (g) other naval sta

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Afghanistan

Mr. David Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last raised the issue of Afghanistan with the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: We have taken every appropriate opportunity to make clear to the Soviet Government our condemnation of their continued military occupation of Afghanistan and to express our firm support for the United Nations secretary-general's efforts to secure a settlement on the lines of successive United Nations resolutions.

British Embassies (Soviet Staff)

Mr. Speed asked the Secretary of State for Foreign a Commonwealth Affairs how many Soviet staff have be dismissed from the British Embassy and residences duri the last 15 years; and for what causes.

Mr. Eggar: Dismissals have been rare and there h been only one in recent times, the reason for which w insubordination.

British Embassy, Moscow

Mr. Speed asked the Secretary of State for Foreign a Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy employ United Kingdom nationals on the staff at t British Embassy in Moscow; and if he will make statement.

Mr. Eggar: In so far as is possible we try and recruit the locally-engaged staff of the Moscow Embassy from within the expatriate community, including of course United Kingdom nationals. But the opportunities for so doing are strictly limited and the costs of employing ancillary staff on United Kingdom terms of service would be prohibitive.

Mr. Speed asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs pursuant to the reply of 20 November, Official Report, column 214, what enrolment procedures are applied to Soviet citizens working in the British Embassy or residing in the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

Mr. Eggar: The Embassy has to apply for Soviet staff to the directorate for the servicing of the diplomatic corps —UPDK which is the sole source of Soviet employees for foreign diplomatic missions, foreign businesses and correspondents. The Embassy then interviews prospective employees and engages or rejects them as appropriate All locally-engaged Soviet employees of the Embassy are subject to a contract which conforms to local Soviet labour laws.

Mr. Speed asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to the answer of 20 November, Official Report, column 214, if he will provide a breakdown of the categories of employment of the 79 Soviet staff employed in the British Embassy and resident in the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

Mr. Eggar: The breakdown of the categories of the 79 Soviet staff employed in Her Majesty's Embassy, Moscow, is as follows:

Administration Section	50
Commercial Section	5
Consular Section	1
Cultural Section	1
Defence Section	5

A further 17 are employed in the houses of United Kingdom based staff.

Of these staff, 16 are employed as office workers, 30 as drivers, including the five employed by defence section, and the remainder as messengers, cleaners, works team labourers and domestic servants.

Advancement of Women

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many copies of the document Nairobi: forward-looking strategies for the advancement of women were produced by his Department; what was the cost; and what steps have been taken to make the document available to the public.

Mr. Eggar: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office has so far produced over 2,000 copies of this document at a cost of about 73 pence per copy. Copies have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses and have been despatched to the six copyright libraries. With the help of the Women's National Commission, the document is being sent to interested organisations, groups and individuals and those who have expressed a wish to receive it.

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will set up a special section in his Department to monitor and support the process of securing equitable representation of women, along the line proposed in paragraph 88 of the Nairobi declaration on forward-looking strategies for the advancement of women.

Mr. Eggar: The text of this declaration has only recently been received and is still under consideration. The Foreign and Commonwealth Office has had equal opportunities officers, with responsibility for advising on the full scope of equal opportunity matters including sex discrimination, since 1984. There are three such officers —one for the diplomatic wing, one for the Overseas Development Administration and one for staff administered from Hanslope park.

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what resources he has allocated to implementing, within his Department, the conclusions of the recent Nairobi conference on forward-looking strategies for the advancement of women.

Mr. Eggar: The report containing the forward-looking strategies for the advancement of women has only recently been received and is still under consideration.

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has had any meetings with the Equal Opportunities Commission to discuss implementation of those parts of the conclusions of the Nairobi conference on forward-looking strategies for the advancement of women relevant to his Department; if he has any plans for future meetings on this subject; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The report containing the forward-looking strategies for the advancement of women has only recently been received and is still being considered. There have been no meetings with the Equal Opportunities Commission, and none is at present planned.

Woman Appointees

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those bodies to which his Department makes appointments, the number of appointments in each case and the number of women appointed in each case.

Mr. Eggar: The information is not readily available, but I will arrange for it to be published in the Official Report as soon as possible.

Peace Organisations (Grants)

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what criteria he uses to decide which organisations claiming to be working for peace should receive grants-in-aid from his Department;

(2) which organisations claiming to work for peace have applied to his Department for grants-in-aid; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: We take into account whether organisations' purposes are in accordance with our foreign policy objectives. Central among these is the preservation of international peace with freedom and justice. Financial constraints meant that not all requests for support can be met. Organisations receiving grants are listed in the main Supply Estimates.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Blood and Blood Products

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the extent of the counselling service provided to carriers of HTLV III virus, in terms of (a) expenditure, (b) numbers of counsellors and (c) efforts made to advertise the service for each health authority.

Mr. Hayhoe: I regret that information is not held centrally on the extent of local counselling services.

Low-Income Families

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) when he expects to be able to publish "Low Income Families 1983";

(2) further to the reply of 12 November to the hon. Member for Suffolk, South (Mr. Yeo), Official Report, column 161, what is the reason for the delay in publishing the 1983 family expenditure survey.

Mr. Newton: Preparation of the new estimates has been delayed by pressures of other work and by the effects of the industrial action at Newcastle central office, which held up the processing of some of the data. However I hope that the estimates will be ready for publication early in the new year.

Disabled Persons (SEQUAL Organisation)

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what grant his Department is making to the SEQUAL organisation to help provide special equipment and aids for living for disabled people; and if he will increase this grant for 1986-87.

Mr. Newton: In the last financial year the Department made a grant of £42,000 to SEQUAL which included a special grant of £5,000 for equipment. This compares with £15,500 in 1981-82. The Department will shortly be discussing with the organisation the level of grant for the current financial year.

Benefits

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the number of people who were refused unemployment or supplementary benefit for failing to take up suitable employment in the United Kingdom in 1979, 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983 and 1984, respectively.

Mr. Newton: Under section 20(1)(b) and (c) of the Social Security Act 1975 a person is disqualified for receiving unemployment benefit if, without good cause, he either refuses or neglects to avail himself of suitable employment. The number of disqualifications for these reasons since 1979 is shown in the table.

Although supplementary benefit may be withheld if a claimant refuses suitable employment and if the situation is still vacant or open to application, such cases are rare, and no statistics are available about the number of cases in which this happens. However, a voluntary unemployment deduction is applied to a supplementary allowance when a person has been disqualified, or would be disqualified, for receiving unemployment benefit under section 20(1) of the Social Security Act. This may be for other reasons than refusal of employment—for example, because of leaving work voluntarily without just cause—but the available statistics do not permit the precise reason for deductions to be identified. The table therefore shows all cases with such deductions.

United Kingdom	*Refusal of unemployment benefit	Reduction of supplementary benefit†
1979	7,774	370,000
1980	8,963	270,000
1981	4,916	190,000
1982	2,774	190,000
1983	1,896	304,000
1984	1,965	Not available

* The figures for refusal of unemployment benefit are for Great Britain 1979-1980 and for the United Kingdom 1981-1983; the information for Northern Ireland is not available for 1979 and 1980 and is not yet available for 1984.

† The supplementary benefit figures have been estimated from information in the annual special inquiry, on the assumption that deductions apply for, on average, four weeks.

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the number of non-United Kingdom citizens in receipt of supplementary benefit for each of the years 1979, 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983, 1984 and at the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Newton: Details of the citizenship or nationality of persons claiming supplementary benefit are not generally collected. However, some statistics are available for nationals of the European Community, excepting Eire, and of certain other European countries. Records are available for 1982, 1983, 1984 and up to July 1985 and the total number of awards is shown in the table.

	Number
1982	2,044
1983	1,390
1984	1,547
1985	1,078

Board and Lodging (Lambeth)

Mr. John Fraser asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people under the age of 26 years are likely to be affected by a limitation on payments for board and lodging in the London borough of Lambeth.

Mr. Newton: I regret that this information is not available. Under the new regulations only new claims are affected by the limitation on payment at the boarder rate.

EC (Anti-poverty Programme)

Mr. John Fraser asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish a list of successful applications under the EEC Anti-poverty Programme; how many applications are currently outstanding; and what the closing date will be for the applications for the next financial year.

Mr. Whitney: On the first part of his question I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley (Mr. Foulkes) on 13 November at columns 204-8. This programme is not a recurrent one and no further applications will be invited in the next financial year. However 15 applications for projects will be invited in the next financial year. However 15 applications for projects to assist so-called "marginals" groups remain to be considered for United Kingdom Government approval and submitted to the Commission by 31 December 1985 for their selection. The funds available to the Commission will permit them to assist only one or possibly two such projects from the United Kingdom.

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what percentage increase in pay would be necessary for a person whose net weekly spending power in work is the same as that when he is unemployed, in order to maintain that parity when welfare benefits are increased by 7 per cent.

Mr. Newton: The information requested would vary on the composition of the household. The information in the table gives three examples of hypothetical family types, whose net weekly spending power is the same as when unemployed. Assumptions are as per the November 1984 DHSS tax-benefit model tables updated to show also the November 1985 situation.

Level of gross earnings at which net weekly spending power in work is equal to that when unemployed and receiving supplementary benefit.

	November 1984	November 1985	Percentage change
Single non-householder over 21	31·40	33·45	+6·5
Single householder	38·83	39·05	+0·6
Married couple with 2 children (4 & 6)	38·79	38·26	−1·4

Note:
In October 1985 a lower percentage national insurance contribution of 5 per cent. for those earning between £35·50 and £55 was introduced.

Earnings Statistics

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish a table, for the years 1959, 1979 and the latest for which figures are available, showing net income at average male manual earnings for a single-wage married man with wife and two children aged (a) two and six years and (b) 15 and 17 years, as a percentage of the net income of a single person on the same wage; and if he can show a comparable figure for a typical pre-war year.

Mr. Newton: The information requested is as follows:

Net income of average male manual earnings for single wage man with wife and two children as a percentage of the net income of a single person on the same wage*

Date	Married couple with 2 children aged (2 & 6) as a percentage of single person	Married couple with 2 children aged (15 & 17) as a percentage of single person
October 1938*	129·3	129·3
August 1959*	117·7	119·9
August 1979	116·8	116·8
August 1985†	118·2	118·2

* Net income derives from estimates of average gross weekly earnings of male manual workers less tax and national insurance contributions at the non-contracted out insurance rates plus child support/child benefit.

Resettlement Units

Mrs. Currie asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the level of staffing for each resettlement unit; and how many staff at each unit have social work, psychiatric or other appropriate qualifications.

Mr. Major: The staff complement for each resettlement unit, grade by grade, is set out in the table. Information on qualifications held by members of staff is not available.

Mrs. Currie asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many beds were provided in each of the resettlement units during the most recent 12-month period for which figures are available; what was the average occupancy for each unit during the same period; and whether there are any significant seasonal variations in the rate of occupancy.

Mr. Major: The table shows the number of beds provided in each of the 23 resettlement units during the 12 months ended 24 September 1985 and the average occupancy level for each unit during that period.

There are significant variations in the rate of occupancy.

Auditory Response Cradles

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services which hospitals have auditory response cradles; and what encouragement he is giving to health authorities to ensure that all hospitals with maternity units have one.

Mr. Whitney: The auditory response cradle is still being evaluated under a research project funded by the Department. Lists of hospital equipment are not held centrally, but the Department and the Department of Trade and Industry has funded the provision of several cradles for use in Great Britain and it is known that cradles have been used by at least six hospitals in England. In May 1984 the Department held a seminar to discuss the place of the cradle in infant hearing screening.

Vaccination

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will state his policy with regard to the vaccination of children against whooping cough;

(2) if he will indicate his policy with regard to vaccination against tuberculosis.

Mr. Whitney: The Department's policy on vaccination against these and other infectious diseases is set out in the memorandum "Immunisation Against Infectious Disease", a copy of which is in the Library.

Board and Lodging Regulations

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will place in the Library a copy of the letter from the chairman of the Social Security Advisory Committee on the absence of consultation by the Government of the committee on the original board and lodging regulations.

Mr. Newton: I assume that the hon. Member is referring to the affidavit sworn by Mr. Barclay, chairman of the Social Security Advisory Committee, which was before the court in the case of R v Secretary of State for Social Services ex parte Cotton. I will place a copy of this affidavit in the Library of the House once court proceedings in this case have been concluded.

Benefit (Take-up)

Mr. Douglas asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the latest figures for the take-up of attendance allowance, invalid care allowance, mobility allowance and severe disablement allowance.

Mr. Newton: The latest available information about the number of recipients of these benefits is as follows:

Attendance allowance
469,000 (estimated) at 31 March 1984.

Invalid care allowance
10,400 at 18 November 1985.

Mobility allowance
400,400 at 25 November 1985.

Severe disablement allowance
227,300 at 22 October 1985.

I regret that it is not possible to give estimates of take-up, in view of uncertainties about the numbers of people who might be entitled to these benefits.

Natural Medicines

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services on what factors he based his decision that natural medicines should meet the same test criteria as allopathic medicines within the review of herbal products under the Medicines Act 1968.

Mr. Whitney: The criteria laid down in the Medicines Act 1968 have to be applied to all medicines, new and old, allopathic or other, and similar criteria are required to be applied to most of these medicines by virtue of European Community pharmaceutical directives. Before a product licence is granted, the licensing authority satisfies itself as regards the particular product, on its safety, efficacy and quality. Allopathic and natural medicines must therefore be treated equally for licensing purposes. As regards effectiveness for treating serious conditions, we are looking for fuller evidence than we would need for products for minor conditions. If that evidence is not readily available, officials are happy to discuss with manufacturers, modifications to therapeutic claims which could allow the product to stay on the market.

Medicines

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the total number of medicines which have had their licences of right withdrawn during the past six years; and which specific medicines this applied to.

Mr. Whitney: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Benefit Claimants

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the total number of claimants in the west midlands region who have ceased to claim unemployment or supplementary benefits between July and October of the current year.

Mr. Newton: Between 11 July and 10 October 1985 119,46 people ceased to claim unemployment benefit, supplementary benefit or national insurance credits at unemployment benefit offices in the west midlands. It is not known how many of these may have subsequently claimed supplementary benefit for reasons other than unemployment, for example sickness or retirement, during this period.

Information about claimants to supplementary benefit for reasons other than unemployment is not available.

Black Report

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services which of the recommendations of the Black report on inequalities in health he has accepted; which he has rejected; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my predecessor to the hon. Member for Manchester, Blackley (Mr. Eastham) on 14 May at column 110.

World Health Organisation (Regional Strategy)

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he intends to take any action to give effect to those recommendations in the World Health Organisation's European regional strategy for attaining health for all by the year 2000, which fall within the responsibility of his Department.

Mr. Whitney: United Kingdom health care policies are already largely in line with the main tenets of the World Health Organisation's European regional strategy for health for all. Nevertheless in determining strategic planning for the National Health Service we shall consider how best to focus on specific objectives of the European strategy.

Pharmacists (New Contract)

Mr. Oakes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many closures he estimates would result from the implementation of the new contract negotiated with pharmacists.

Mr. Hayhoe [pursuant to his reply, 27 November 1985, c. 606]: We have no target in view for the number of closures of pharmacies under the proposed new contract. It is recognised that there would be pressures on some small contractors, but the decision whether or not to withdraw from National Health Service contract is a matter for their own commercial judgment.

TRANSPORT

A41 (Bourne End—Hemel Hempstead Bypass)

Mr. Robert B. Jones asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on progress towards the construction of the A41 Bourne End and Hemel Hempstead bypass.

Mr. Ridley: The final decision fixing the route of the A41 Berkhamsted and Kings Langley bypasses was announced in April. We have since then been reviewing traffic predictions and their effect on design in the light of the revised national road traffic forecasts. We hope to publish the draft side roads and compulsory purchase orders next summer.

Hemel Hempstead (Road Improvements)

Mr. Robert B. Jones asked the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received from the county surveyor of Hertfordshire about improvements to the junction of London Road and Fishery Road, Hemel Hempstead, Hertfordshire.

Mr. Ridley: The need for a scheme to improve this junction on the A41 trunk road has been identified by Hertfordshire county council in its capacity as agent for the Department. We hope to carry out the work in the financial year 1986-87.

Dartford Tunnel

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has received any submissions from private firms or consortia concerning the building of a third Dartford Tunnel other than that received from the Dartford Tunnel Group.

Mr. Ridley: Submissions have not yet been invited, but we have received various approaches from a number of firms or groups interested in providing additional capacity at Dartford. It has been made clear to all that selection will be by open competition. I will announce the terms and conditions shortly.

British Rail Engineering Limited

Mr. Coombs asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the future of the British Rail Engineering Limited site in Swindon.

Mr. David Mitchell: British Rail Engineering Limited has confirmed that most of its Swindon works will close from March 1986. BREL has commissioned consultants to advise on the scope for developments on the works site. BREL is also taking steps to encourage creation of new jobs, and has made available a £1·25 million package of grants and loan guarantees. I very much welcome BREL's initiatives and I have urged the Thamesdown borough council and the workforce to look to the future and to start working with BREL on creating new jobs.

Passenger-carrying Vehicles (Safety Requirements)

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the principles underlying his Department's safety requirements for those who carry passengers for hire and reward.

Mr. David Mitchell: It has been the policy of successive Governments to see that those who carry passengers for hire and reward by whatever mode comply with high standards of safety. We are continuing that policy.

Channel Fixed Link

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to receive the study he has commissioned from land use consultants into the environmental impact of a Channel fixed link and in particular the secondary and tertiary development consequences of such a link for Kent and elsewhere; and when he intends to make this study available to the House.

Mr. David Mitchell: My officials will be receiving a series of reports from land use consultants during December. I shall consider making a comprehensive report available to the House in due course.

Advancement of Women

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will establish a special office within his Department to monitor periodically and accelerate the progress towards equitable representation of women along the lines of paragraph 88 of the conclusions of the Nairobi conference on forward-looking strategies for the advancement of women;

(2) if he has any plans for implementing paragraph 58 of the conclusions of the Nairobi conference on forward-looking strategies for the advancement of women, relating to the collection of statistics on the situation of women;

(3) if he has had any meetings with the Equal Opportunities Commission to discuss the implementation of those parts of the conclusions of the Nairobi conference on forward-looking strategies for the advancement of women relevant to his Department; and if he has any future plans for such meetings;

(4) what steps he is taking to evaluate the progress in implementing those parts of the conclusions of the United Nations Nairobi conference on forward-looking strategies for the advancement of women which apply to his Department; what resources he has allocated to this; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: My Department is already reviewing its policies and procedures to ensure equality of opportunity for women in the Department. A joint committee of management and trade unions was set up in 1984 to consider such matters as recruitment, promotion, training and flexible working patterns; its work continues. Equal opportunity officers have already been appointed to oversee progress in this area. My Department is also participating in further servicewide work on this subject including the creation of the necessary data base.

As to equal opportunities in the transport field generally, my Department is studying the text of the Nairobi forward-looking strategies for the advancement of women and will be considering with other Government Departments and the Equal Opportunities Commission how best to take its conclusions forward.

Women Appointees

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list those bodies to which his Department makes appointments, the number of appointees and the number of these who are women.

Mr. Ridley: I make appointments to all the bodies listed in my Department's entry in the Her Majesty's Stationery Office publication "Public Bodies 1984"—a copy of which is in the Library and which gives information on membership—with the exception of the Commissioners of Irish Lights, and the Transport Tribunal.

I also make appointments to:

	Total number of appointees	Women
Honorary Medical Advisory Panel on Cardiovascular Disorders	5	Nil
Honorary Medical Advisory Panel on Driving and Diabetes	7	1
London Regional Transport	13	3
Port Authorities (25)	129	Nil
Road Traffic Law Review	6	Nil

In addition there are numerous Departmental Working Committees on which non-civil servants are invited by my Department to serve jointly with officials. Detailed information on these Committees could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

PRIME MINISTER

EC (Statistics)

Mr. Foulkes asked the Prime Minister if she will publish a table in the Official Report showing such information as is available to her for each country in the European Economic Community as well as Spain and Portugal the (a) gross domestic product per capita, (b) unemployment rate, (c) inflation rate, (d) percentage of the work force employed in manufacturing, (e) percentage of the work force employed in agriculture, (f) percentage of the work force employed in services, (g) percentage of the total population who live in areas which qualify for regional fund assistance from the European Economic Community and (h) the percentage of total exports which go outside the European Economic Community.

The Prime Minister: The information requested by the hon. Member can be found in the following publications: (a) OECD National Accounts—page 125, table 6; (b) and (c) OECD Main Economic Indicators—pages 18, 23 and individual country pages; (d), (e) and (f) OECD Labour Force Statistics—pages 34 to 37; (h) OECD Monthly Statistics of Foreign Trade series A—individual country pages. These publications are all available in the House of Commons Library.

Reliable and comparable figures for the percentage of the total population of the listed countries living in EC regional fund assistance areas are not available.

Liverpool District Council

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Prime Minister whether any of her Ministers have discussed with representatives of banks or any other commercial organisations Government support, endorsement or approval for loans or guarantees to Liverpool district council at any time since the end of June; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The Department of the Environment has informed the commercial organisations concerned that deferred purchase arrangements undertaken by local authorities do not require Government approval. These arrangements carry no Government guarantee.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 87

SESSION 1985-86

18th November—29th November 1985

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc., between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There will, however, be headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one will find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instrument etc., under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Mr. Speaker and his deputies are brought together under the heading Speakers rulings and statements.

Other contributions by Mr. Speaker and his deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates, Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates etc. (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R=first reading, 2R=second reading, Money res=money resolution, Com=Committee stage, Rep=Report stage, 3R=third reading, amendt/amendts=amendment/amendments, *=matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
